CRIME TO INTERFERE

With Recruiting Meetings and Soliciting.

Fine or Imprisonment the Penalties.

Ottawa, Sept. 4—With a view to meeting such cases as the Montreal instance, where open air recent recruiting meetings for the Irish Rangers have been broken up by a crowd of disturbers of the Nationalist ilk., the Government has passed an order in council making it a criminal offence for anyone to disturb in any way recruiting meetings.

The order in Council after declaring that it is lawful to hold recruiting meetings in any place, indoors or outdoors, recites that any member of the expeditionary forces acting under instructions of his superior officer may stand or remain in any public street or place and there accost, or interview any man of military age who is willing to consider a recruiting proposal. Interference with such recruiting meetings or canvas for recruits shall be punishable on summary conviction by imprisonment of not more than two months or a fine of not more than $100, or both. For a second or subsequent offence a two months' prison sentence must be imposed. It is further provided that any military police or peace officer or man belonging to the expeditionary forces may "arrest "upon view and without warrant" any person who interferes with recruiting meetings or the individual canvass of recruiting officers or men.

HOW BRITISH WON

In a Most Heart-Breaking Fight.

Huns Chose Time of a Heavy Rainstorm and Came on Wave After Wave.

British Headquarters in France, Sept. 4—Some details are now accessible of the German counter-attacks on Thursday against the British positions beyond Delville or Devet's wood, in which the most desperate attempt of the largest force supported the heaviest artillery fire the Germans have made since the British offensive began. The time was chosen midst a heavy rainstorm, when the British were drenched to the skin and their trenches running with water. Against a mile and a half front the Germans used the 118th Division of about 10,000 men. Of these it is estimated that about 2,000 survive.

For six weeks now Delville Wood and the German positions opposite have been under an increasingly murderous shell fire. Anything like deep trenches with usual dugouts became impossible. On the 24th the British gained high ground, looking down on Flers and close to Ginchy. The Germans began their artillery preparation for an assault with an unprecedented volume of gas shells. These the British in their gas helmets easily withstood. Then came curtains of high explosives and shrapnel. This the British answered in kind. The British stuck to the remnants of their crumbling trenches till waves of Germans appeared through the fog of smoke from the shells. Four waves came on before any Germans reached the trenches. Each in turn were mowed by blasts from rifles, machine guns and artillery. Meanwhile the British trenches became formless stretches of mud flayed by German guns in the same fashion as the German trenches were flayed by the British artillery.

It was a question of numbers in the ghastly contest, and the side having the most men would have the superior force of survivors and overcome the other. With the fifth wave the British gave up the line of trenches, and those still alive fell back into the shell craters at the edge of the wood and scattered here and there in these holes which became strong points. They took savage toll of the Germans in the fifth wave. The surviving Germans were unable to either advance or retreat as dawn came. Thus the foes were literally interwoven, men or group often in one shell crater not knowing whether the neighboring one was occupied by friend or foe.

Neither side could resort to artillery fire, not knowing the location of its own men. Thus it became a man to man fight in that area of fragments of dead mixed with torn earth. Using their light machine guns, which are carried forward readily and have a distinct advantage over those of the heavier German pattern, and bombing persistently while their artillery had kept an impassable curtain of fire against the German reserves, the British regained a good portion of the ground lost.

Stating his admiration of the courage with which the Germans advanced, a British officer said: "If these are Hindenburg tactics we welcome them." There is no evidence of any German forces having been withdrawn from this front since the Roumanian entry into the war. On the contrary, the German gunfire has been increased.

William P. Grinnell, 75 years old, and inmate of the Town Poor Farm at Tewkesbury, Mass., finds he is heir to $20,000 from Hetta Green's estate.
