FROM THE WM. A MARSH CO.
Quebec, Canada.

November 22, 1909.

Dear Sirs:

Replying to yours of the 19th with reference to our Canadian Law for the Investigation of Industrial Disputes, which is entitled the Lemieux Act. We might say, that as far as we are concerned, we have never had occasion to use the law in any difficulty we have had, and therefore cannot speak of it in reference to our business, but from general reports seen in our papers, we think that the law has given a great deal of satisfaction in this Country, and as far as we know the law can be extended to any and all employments in this Country.

We might say that the firm of John Ritchie Co.

here in Quebec have had occasion to use the law in a dispute they had with their lasters, and perhaps you might get more information from them which would be useful, as they could give you their experience.

Yours very truly,

W. L. Mackenzie King Papers
