WISER AND WEAKER.

When men compare the people of today, physically, with those of the past they say the present generation is weaker. When they compare achievements the conclusion is that the present generation is wiser. And so they say each generation grows weaker and weaker than the last. If you are weak and run down try that great nerve and brain tonic. It will build you up and make you strong. Sold by all druggists. Fifty cents a bottle six bottles $2.50.

AT DR. HAWK'S FROM NERVOUS PROstration. Cured by Hawk's nerve and stomach tonic.

MONTREAL, June 29—Shortly after midnight a loud explosion occurred in the press room of the Witness office. There is no clue whatever as to the guilty parties and the motive cannot be suspected. Several of the windows were shattered. The explosion occurred within a few feet of a valuable press. The fire was torn up slightly. The Witness is a strong temperance and anti-Protestant organ and has for years been carrying on a determined campaign advocating its principles. Shortly before the explosion occurred the night watchman was spoken to by a stranger at the front door of the building. Mr. James Harper, city editor of the Witness, says there is not the slightest clue to the perpetrators of last night's outrage, neither can he assign a motive. The only conjecture put forward by the public is that the Witness' persistent anti-Catholic stand has drawn upon it the vengeance of some crank, who hoped to destroy its splendid Hoe press, for the bomb alighted but a few feet therefrom, passed through the floor and into the cellar underneath. The press-room, however, is uninjured. It took some time to get the explosion from the street to Fortification lane, near the window overlooking the latter place. The window frames are of slight construction and offered no resistance to the bomb, nor did the floor where it fell. This lack of resistance explains the smallness of the damage done. About 135 windows were broken in the annex and in adjoining buildings and the loss will probably not exceed $200. The place is thronged to day with people attracted to the spot. The suite of business offices and the editorial rooms are uninjured.

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld., June 29—Judge Winter, Pitts and Carter, of the Supreme Court, gave judgment yesterday on the applications of Marshall, Roger, Heston & Co. and others for issuance forthwith of a mandamus directing the Customs Department to deliver goods duty free. The application was granted. The Whiteites are exultant over the judgment, and prominent lawyers say that the outcome affects the Governor's (Sir Terence O'Brien) position in England as he has been allowed the Government to insist on collecting the duties. Parliament, it is now thought will be called for the purpose of passing a revenue bill.

The Whiteites still have a majority of two.

Rome, June 29—A man in the garb of a workman was observed to shadow Premier Crispi yesterday afternoon, and last evening he was found loitering outside Signor Crispi's residence. When asked as to his motive for following the Premier, he declared that it was his purpose to "square accounts with him." A large knife was found on the man's person.

Youths Corner.

THE AWAKENING OF THE CHAMPLAIN FAMILY.

I never knew such a silent family as the Champlains. One scarcely ever heard them speak to each other. Mr. Champlain had saved up more than ten thousand dollars from his farming, and neither Mary nor Jerry knew it; Jerry had collected nine hundred dollars from his wages, so that he might go to the Iowa State University, and neither his father nor Mary knew it; and Mary was tired of home and work, and needed a change, and neither Mr. Champlain nor Jerry knew it. Every day went by in very much the same way. Mr. Champlain superintended the farming, Jerry looked after the stock, and Mary took care of the house and the dairy. They hardly ever spoke to each other, and never showed any signs of affection, except when Mary kissed the other two good-night.

Jerry had had a job of it saving up that nine hundred dollars. It is hard for fathers to realize that their sons are growing up, especially when the family lives almost alone, as the Champlains did. So though Jerry had the entire charge of the live stock, and superintended the breeding of all the horses and cattle, his father only allowed him eight dollars a week. But when Jerry was twelve he had made up his mind that he would go to college; and now that he was nineteen, he was pretty nearly ready to go. A thousand dollars was the sum he had fixed upon as the proper amount to take him through the university. Money is precious when one has slaved for it and denied one's self new clothes for it; and I am afraid poor Jerry eyed his savings-bank book with almost miserly eyes as he saw his nine hundred dollars changing into a thousand.

'Come in.'

The door opened, and Mary came in. Her eyes were red from crying, and that made Jerry uncomfortable. He put down his algebra-book, and waited to hear what she had to say. She did not say anything, and they sat for some time in silence.

'I'm miserable,' she broke out at last, and the words brought a fresh flow of tears. She checked them, however, from a vague feeling that Jerry wouldn't like it.

'What's the matter?' asked her brother. It seemed as if this unfortunate family could not say more than three words running.

'Well, I guess I don't see enough of other girls. I'm kind of lonely. And I don't know nothing. I want to get out. I want to go to college.'

'Father, I guess Mary wants to go to college.'

Mr. Champlain said nothing. He and his son had just finished their day's work, and were watching one of the hired men milking the cows.

'Would you let her go if she had the money, father?'

'Well, I guess she's got it, so maybe you'd better let her go. Jerry said these words quickly, as if he were afraid he would change his mind before he got them out. I've got nine hundred and a thousand dollars in the savings-bank, father, and I guess I couldn't spend it better. But if you'd just as soon, I'll transfer it to you, and let it come as if it was from you. She wouldn't take it from me.'

'What'd you save up a thousand dollars for?' asked his father.

'Oh, I just saved it up,' said Jerry.

Then they stood in silence for a little longer.

'Will you do it, father?'

'I guess it's supper-time,' said Mr. Champlain; and they went into the house.

The next morning at breakfast Mr. Champlain seemed a little

Jerry was not used to comforting people. 'That's too bad,' he said. 'Don't cry, Molly. He did not kiss her, because he never did kiss her except when she came up to kiss him.'

'I guess I'm bothering you, Molly, said, after a pause. 'I'm too silly, anyway. Good-night.'

She walked over to where he sat and kissed him.

'Good-night, dear,' he said. The 'dear' sounded so strangely that she looked up suddenly when he said it, and saw him blushing. Then she went out, and he went on with his algebra.

He went on with his algebra, but I don't believe he accomplished much that evening. His thoughts kept getting in the way of his work, and when he went to bed they kept getting in the way of his sleep.

So Mary wanted to go to college, did she? Poor child, he did not wonder. She had no one of her age in the neighborhood, and hardly a woman within a radius of a mile except old Mrs. Atkins, and Mrs. Atkins was deaf. But how was she to go? Father never would send her. He could not spare the money. Then it occurred to Jerry that he might give up going to college and let her go instead.

'But that would be hardly fair to myself,' he thought. 'And, besides, she'd never take the money from me. If she would, I might—No, it would be too much. Saving ever since I was twelve. Poor Mary! I wish I could do something. But not that—at least I don't feel as if I could. And so he thought and thought, and at last fell asleep.

'Father, I guess Mary wants to go to college.'

Mr. Champlain said nothing. He and his son had just finished their day's work, and were watching one of the hired men milking the cows.
