

The Gourlay Heirloom

¶ Only a treasured possession that will not deteriorate with time is worthy of consideration to become an heirloom in the family. It must have a binding association of pleasant memories in the home - the enjoyment of which is recalled and lived over again by its very presence. The Gourlay piano is made with a solidity of construction that gives those wearing qualities, absolutely necessary in a piano that is to be used constantly for years.

¶ A Gourlay for that reason is a gilt edge investment which repays itself a thousand times in life-long pleasure and joy derived from its neverfailing appeal to refinement, beauty and charac-

¶ Quality is the first and last thought throughout the whole course of its fine construction. The materials used are of the highest grade procurable regardless of the cost. Only when the oecomes the finished product of the most thorough artistic workmanship that scientific knowledge can devise -then only is the price figured.

This Gourlay standard of quality first and price second is universally approved in musical centres. The fact that the Gourlay is constructed to weather the severest test of time and to hold its beauty of tone with reliable strength. and character renders it a highly valued heirloom for any refined home.

The purchaser of a piano should carefully consider this important feature and investigate the Gourlay. You will find its claims substantiated beyond your expectations.

PARLOR COURTING.

(Copyright: 1913: By Laura Jean Libbey)
"We shorten'd days to moments by love's art;
Whilst our two souls
Perceived no passing time, as if a part
Our love had still been of eternity."
Every on looks forward joyously to the spring and its outdoor pleasures save a disgruntled few, perhaps, who cry out in dismay: "Where are we to do our courting?"

"Winter time is a boon to the timid maiden, for there is no one to observe the parlor courting which is so sweet to her and her best fellow. Young men will not stay indoors in the warm weather. They cannot walk through the streets holding hands. If they sit in the park close together some one whom they know is sure to pass and see them and they are poked fun at from every direction.

Has his younger brother and his sister and his sister and his sister and his sister to work end his sister's two children to support and he hasn't the money to marry any one just yet. He has money doming to him on a lease he had on some mine before he came here but he lost all the lost all this money lie would have been going with the prettiest girl in the world for nine months, and an deeply and irrevocably in love with her. I dream about her fore he came here but he lost all this day long, and am unable to work at my law, which I am studying in a love with her. I dream about her of the way he has asked me to wait two of three way he has asked me to wait two others way he has asked me to wait two others way he has asked me to wait two others way he has asked me to wait the move matters would not make much the world from the trouble comes in. I promised hm I would wait he ought to put me off that way; if he won't that way; if he won't take he or be mother, and allove with her. I dream about her at my law, which I am Studying in a love with her. I day long, and an unable to work at my law, which I am Studying in a love with five hours and if yearly only in love with her. I dream about her to him onthe the jost all thad, the prettiest girl in the world for nine months, and a has his younger brother and his sister question.

see them and they are poked fun at from every direction.

Courting out of doors might be very well for the girl who is sure of her lover; but for the lass whose sweetheart has not yet proposed it assumes quite a different aspect.

What girl wants her friends to know that she has been billing and cooing with a certain young man when perchance he has not declared himself by proposing? Wiseacres say there should be no billing and cooing until a young man has declared his intentions. The theory is right, but it seldom works in that direction.

There are generally the first stages of courting to be indulged in, ere they conclude that they well alike to marry—sitting side by side, gazing into each other's eyes, perhaps—breathing of sweet words intended for her ears only.

All this noticeable tenderness would

Did She Snub Him?

"Dear Miss Libbey: I am 25 and have been keeping company with a young ady about my age for about two years and I wave very reason to believe that she was acted very strangley towards me and I am 25 and have been keeping company with a young ady about my age for about two years and I wave every reason to believe that she was acted very strangley towards me and I am 25 and have been keeping company with a young ady about my age for about two years and I wave every reason to believe that she was acted very strangley towards me and I am 25 and have years and I wave every reason to believe that she was acted very strangley towards me and I am 25 and have years and I wave every towards we and I am 25 and have years and I wave every towards we and I am 25 and have years and I wave every towards we and I am 25 and have years and I wave every towards we and I am 25 and have years and I wave every treason to believe that she was acted very strangley towards me and I and a loss to understand why she years and I wave very towards we and I am 25 and have years and I wave very towards we and I am 25 and have years and I wave very towards we and I wave years and I wave years and I wave years and I wave years All this noticeable tenderness would be eliminated when the weather is so pleasant that they have to stroil out of doors, mingling with strangers. When she can entertain her admirer in her parlor few of her friends may know of him if she does not wish them to. If they should agree to disagree no one would be the wiser. But when she must be seen constantly in public with him she realizes that they are lovers must be patent to her dear 500 friends.

Going about with a handsome, attractive young man when they are not one lis a jealous girl or one who has very she is not always pleased to meet some of her girl friends who are as beautiful as they are attractive. She cannot prevent them from stopping to speak with her, nor can she evade introducing the bevy of girls to her handsome companion.

Shall He Go Back to the Farm?

"Dear Miss Libbey: I am a farmer of 22 and came to Chicago, which is my home town, a few months ago. Now I am working in a shop and don't like it. I fell in love with a girl in this city and love her very much, and would like to marry her. I don't know what fall off to an alarming extent. In almost every life's romance the question of a vocation is one of the most propage to see no sharp ears to hear.
