Questions and Answers.

LICE ON CATTLE.

A subscriber at Uxbridge asks for a cure for lice on cattle. There are a number of remedies recommended for this trouble, all of which are effective if properly applied. The chief difficulty in applying a remedy is that the application is not continued long enough. A number of the remedies will get rid of the lice in about one application, but as the eggs are not killed they hatch out and the animal is as badly infested as ever.

One application of linseed oil will destroy lice but will not destroy the eggs. About a week after the first application, when the eggs will be hatched, a second application of linseed oil should be made. A kerosene emulsion, made of kerosene and soap, will also prove effective. Another remedy we have heard strongly recommended is to wash the animal well with good strong soapsuds, so strong that soap bubbles are plentiful. When well washed with this it should be allowed to dry on; that is, after the suds have been applied do not wipe them off, as many do.

DISCRIMINATION IN THE PRICE OF HOGS.

To the Editor of FARMING:

Is there any difference in the price of our hogs and what the drovers term northern hogs, on the Toronto market, providing they are of equal quality? The drovers say that ours will not sell for as much money. By an answer through FARMING you will greatly oblige.

We do not think any difference would be made in the price of hogs from different districts on this market, providing the hogs were of equal quality. Some of the packers, however, do make a distinction in the price which they pay for hogs from different sections of the country, not because
