

Michael P. Stein is a computer programmer and musician from Arlington, VA. He first became interested in the subject of Holocaust denial in April 1994 when he came across denial messages on Usenet. He has worked with the Nizkor Project to produce answers to some specific denial claims. He has had extensive private correspondence with many deniers. Based on these contacts, he has developed a more complex view of what makes them tick, besides simple antisemitism.

Nadine Strossen, Professor of Law at New York Law School since 1988, has written, lectured, and practised extensively in the areas of constitutional law, civil liberties and international human rights. In 1991, she was elected President of the American Civil Liberties Union, the first woman to head America's largest and oldest civil liberties organization. In 1991 and 1994, the National Law Journal included Professor Strossen in its triennial special section, "Profiles in Power: the 100 Most Influential Lawyers in America." She has served on the boards of directors of many human rights organizations, and has authored and co-authored numerous publications, including Defending Pornography: Free Speech, Sex, and the Fight for Women's Rights.

Kenneth Swan is a lawyer, arbitrator and mediator in the city of Toronto. He is the Vice President of the Canadian Civil Liberties Association and former Chair of the National Board of Directors.

Eddie Taylor is Legal Counsel for the Canadian Human Rights Commission in Ottawa. He is an Adjunct Professor of Law with the Faculty of Law at the University of Ottawa. He has earned a reputation as a top anti-hate advocate, serving as counsel in cases against hate groups including the Heritage Front, the Ku Klux Klan and Liberty Net, before the Human Rights Tribunal, the Federal Courts, and the Supreme Court of Canada. Mr. Taylor has written widely on human rights issues, publishing in the areas of freedom of expression, hate propaganda, racial discrimination, and disability rights.

Prof. Mark Webber, with degrees in German Language and Literature from Harvard College and Yale University, teaches German Studies at York University, where he directs The Canadian Centre for German and European Studies. He has published in the fields of German literary history, Holocaust studies, and intercultural understanding between Germans and North Americans. He is currently a member of the National Cabinet of the League for Human Rights and the Institute for International Affairs of B'nai Brith Canada. In 1993 the President of the Federal Republic of Germany awarded Mark Webber the Officer's Cross of the Federal Order of Merit (the German equivalent of the Order of Canada) for his scholarly and cultural contributions to increasing understanding between Germans and Canadians. He has just returned from ten months' research leave at the University of Konstanz in Germany.

Dr. Andrew S. Winston is Professor of Psychology at the University of Guelph, and specializes in the history of psychology and the psychology of art. His recent publications have analyzed the history of antisemitism in academic psychology and the use of psychological research on race by neo-fascist groups.

Kriminaldirektor Sigurd Werner has headed the police unit responsible for countering terrorism, anti-democratic movements (particularly right-wing extremism) and espionage in Wurttemberg, Germany for the past two years. In his 32 years with the Baden-Wurttemberg police, Mr. Werner has been involved in investigating organized crime and developing international co-operation between police agencies. He has spearheaded the initiative to develop a joint German-French police service, and in 1992-93 played a leading role in building up the coordinating body for the European police force Europol.

Rochelle Wilner is the National Chair of the League for Human Rights. A former teacher and tireless community volunteer, Ms. Wilner has spearheaded the League's recent public education programs in Holocaust education, anti-racism and diversity training. She is a past National Vice President of B'nai Brith Canada.

Mervin Witter is the Director of the Ontario Region of the Canadian Human Rights Commission.