Sir Arthur Currie, Prin.,

McGill University,
Montreal, Canada:

Dear Sir:

I think I have written you once before regarding to offer made by Lord Atholstan on January 23rd, 1923 for the cure of Cancer. I do not remember that I have had reply to my letter but am writing again as I wish some information as to the progress that is being made regarding this case.

I have had a little with my new adventure:- really I have a real good testimonial from one of the proudest old men living in the United States today. He says that I saved his life and I do not know that he is very much wrong as that is one of the most deadly diseases I know of. It is certain death in the long-run. It may take several years or a decade, but 'tis sure as poisoning in any other form. Cancer is nothing but a poisoning that generates from some central point from which it spreads, rather slowly in some cases and faster in others.

I am now having better success than I have ever had as I am really advertising for patients of this dreaded disease I know of about three but have not really located them so that I may get out and see them. However, I am going to try to gain information in just a short time as to where I may go and interview them and induce them to try it out. If successful, I will certainly inform Lord Atholstan of my claims at once and try to claim the reward that is offered by him.

What I would like to know is this? Has there been any real good claims presented lately? If so, how are they proving out and what is their nature?

I have recently heard of a remedy taken from the bark of a tree in Switzerland which is meeting with some very good results. This is very disappointing to me, in a way, as I have not been successful in getting you people interested enough in my remedy to even say, "Send me a sample and I will try it out and be convinced myself as to its merits" How glad I would be to send you a sample and let you try it on the two kinds that I now recommend this for. It may be that later on you would be able to develop something from the analysis of this medicine that would prove of real good service to the world and cure most any kind of cancer. Who knows what a little thing will do?

Trusting that I will be favored with this information by return mail, I am,

Very truly yours.

I. W. Hawk.
