

a passing fox—missed the fox and struck a nugget of silver. Subsequent events proved that even had he got the fox he wouldn't have been a match for him in ways that are credited to Reynard.

I've met a number of people who might have had "that mine." One man told me that one of the Herron boys once came to him with some copper which he said he found where later silver was discovered by Larose. "He offered it—the claim—to me for $200, but my partner said, 'to Hull with it!'"—wicked partner—but he was prophetic, for to Hull it went, but didn't stay.
