Recognition of Marriages.

Upon motion of Mr. Meighen, the bill was amended in respect to the bill was amended in respect to the date after which marriages will not be recognized so far as the conscription law is concerned. In the bill as first drafted this date was June as first drafted this date was June 11, 1917. In Mr. Meighen's amendment it is changed to July 6, 1917.

There was some attempt to revive discussion on the subject of classes, and Colonel Currie (N. Simcoe) took the resistion that there should be two the position that there should be two classes, viz., unmarried and married men. All the unmarried men, he argued, should be conscripted before the married men were compelled to serve, and in this position he was supported by Mr. Pardee (West Lamb-

Solicitor-General Meighen said that for obvious military reasons it was much more desirable to conscript men between 20 and 35 than between 35 and 45 years of age. the list of persons exempt from conscription. He said this was along the lines of the American act. Mr. Nesbitt (N. Oxford) objected vigorously He did not see why divinity students should be put on the "Indian list." He was supported in this contention by Mr. Morphy (N. Perth).

Sir Robert Borden said that so many clergymen had gone as chaplains to the war that advanced theological students had been drawn upon to fill their pulpits.

Concession to Quebec.

Mr. Proulx (Prescott) poured oil upon the growing flame by saying that the amendment was necessary for the protection of young men preparing for the Roman Catholic priesthood, which caused Mr. Nesbitt to observe that Roman Catholic students were no better than Protestants. This passage at arms led to a franker statement from those opposing the bill, and it became evident that the clause was considered as another concession to Quebec. Mr. Morphy (North Perth) said the most active participants in the riots against conscription in the province of Quebec were the divinity students this clause intended to exempt. Hon. Charles Marcil pointed out that the Roman Catholic divinity student, after he received minor orders was a member of die clergy, and probably out claim his exemption under another clause of the statute.

Dr. Clark (Red Deer) said that comparatively few people would be exempt by passing this amendment.

The amendment was finally adopted without division, but may be reconsidered tomorrow. A number of Ontario Conservative members went to the prime minister's office later in the evening and made strong representations on the subject.

WESTON POLICE COURT.

For Further Particulars

Two Boys in Court for Stealing

Before Magistrato J. H. Taylor. the Weston Police Court, Fred. Moore and Norman Harper, two Youths, were yesterday allowed out on suspended sentence on the charge of stealing one coat and hat, the pro-perty of J. Body, a farmer of Vaughan Township. As the goods were re-turned the magistrate was inclined to be lenient with them, and also aid-ed them in securing work with a local factory. These youths came from Parry Sound, and were working Body's farm.

orninging the conscription law into force as soon as it receives the royal assent. As the bill was drafted it was not to come into force until proclaimed by order in council.

Divinity Students.

A lively debate was precipitated when Sir Robert Borden moved an amendment adding divinity students to street, Toronto; R. Pencock, England; R. L. Barlow, Australia; J. Cooken, Lougheed, Ata; R. C. Murphy, Cooken, Lougheed,

The object of forcing the Lomnica River positions, a feat which has been proceeding for two days, is to advance forward upon Dolina, and the object of crossing the Dniester is to get behind the enemy's front north of the river and to compel him to retreat. The movement south of the Dniester has for its object the outflanking of the whole defensive system of the sector between Brzezany and the Narayuwka River, where the enemy reports increased artillery fire. A weakening in this region would enable the Russians to pierce the enemy's centre, a manoeuvre calculated to turn defeat into disaster. On the Stokhod River, the Russian raiders continue their activity. This movement suggests an attack in force, with the object of forcing the Lomnica River positions, a feat which has symington avenue, Toronto; J. G. Baker, Orillia, Ont.; J. Langley, England: A. Attempts of the Germans to secure more aerial observation on the British front in France have led to the most severe aerial fighting since the beginning of the war, according to British general headquarters. At a loss of nine machines the Royal Flying Corps brought down 14 German aeroplanes and drove down 16 others out of control, a total of 30. Continuous engagements were fought between large formations, consisting of even as many as 30 machines. Dritish anti-aircraft guns also shot down one German machine. Other British machines took photographs of the German lines, and bombing squadrons also threw down explosives on German aerodromes, shelters and railway stations.

An account of the action in the Belgian sand dunes, sent by the Associated Press correspondent from British headquarters, says that the German attack resembled the British offensive at Messines turned the wrong It was a much smaller effort, but it showed that the enemy had practiced British tactics and had rehearsed the battle on a much smaller scale. The British troops on the north bank of the Yser fought the enemy to the death. The surrounded, the British staff officers at regimental headquarters fought the enemy with revolvers and bombs till the end. The Germans also attacked some British troops in a turnel by bombs and liquid fire, but the British resisted till all were killed. A number of survivors swam the Yser, or were brought across by ropes stretched over the river. It is believed that the Germans got few British prisoners.

The squabble in German political quarters has died down. Von Bethmann-Hollweg, servile time-server for the military party, remains imperial chancellor. In Germany electoral changes and ministerial changes have no effect on the military policy of the land, for the German constitution forbids political interference with the army except at the beginning and end of the war. If it suits the army chiefs to sacrifice any minister to appease popular indignation they will do it without compunction,

The disaster to the British Dreadnought Vanguard rivals the disaster to the Royal George considerably more than a century ago. The one was blown up while at anchor; the other was upset while being heaved over to have her bottom scraped. On both ships 800 men or so were lost. The cause of the explosion which destroyed the Vanguard remains unknown cause of the explosion which destroyed the Vanguard remains unknown. She was a useful vessel of the first-class. As the allies have now more than 200 ships of the Dreadnought class in commission the loss of this fine ship little affects their strength on the sea, but the death of so many brave men is mourned by all.
