TWO SIDES OF THE WRECK.

By Mary Reed Crowell.

A roasting July day, hotter at the seashore than anywhere else. A land breeze blowing in sultry gusts over the hot sands, and the ocean smooth and waveless as a pool, and the breakers, scarce deserving the name, rolling in lazily and forcelessly. A glare over earth, sky and sea, and Roy Wyllys, stretched at full length on the beach, a white, green lined umbrella planted in the sand at his head. "It is nothing more nor less than positively beastly," he thought. savagely. What a precious fool 1 was to leave the Kaaterskill House, and pretty Minute Morris, and those jolly Garretson girls, and a cool, breezy air, for this hot sand heapand the plain little dark creature of whom Gus has raved so uninterruptedly, imploring me to come and be 'captivated.' Capti vated is good. I imagine if I wait until little Elsie Eyre does it, I'll go scot free the rest of my life! She's too homely and little and dark for anything - the preposterousness of her fascinating me." At reveral hundred yards off, swinging in a hammock, Elsie Eyre was horrifying her slater, pretty, elegant Mrs. Augustus Cameron, by her very positive remarks. Admire him! Why, I think he is absor-lutely the most disagreeable man I ever met in my life! He's old and ugly and reserved, and-oh, just despicable! Whatever in the world Gus Cameron thought I'd see in Mr. Wyllys to admire is utterly past

And of course, Mrs. Cameron repeated the naughty words to her lord and master with him to-night. He isn't one hit what upon the first convenient opportunity. "Whatever in the world we'll do about it

I cannot imagine," she said, despairingly. "It would be such a splendid match." "We've made a big mistake, and we'll have to change our tactics," Mr. Cameron said, wisely. "You must contrive to man-

Wyllys down, instead of praising him up- I could have learned to dislike Roy Wylly's atrong suspicions he doesn't admire Elsie and I'll never go to aleep if you den't go any more than she does him, although he markable transpired. Mr. Wyllys was off in his yacht a great deal of the time and self. Elsie was engaged in her own felicitous way of making herself happy—a way that nesses as Roy Wyllys is," he said dis made Mrs. Gus l. ok resigned and perfectly helpless, because the girl would persist in While they last, one will be mailed to all her life done just such things, and have departed. What a pity you are not a there never was any telling what she blonde, Elsie, so you might keep Mr.-"

All the same, she thought not a little of Mr. Wyllys, wondering why it was some people insisted on calling him so fascinating and handsome-"When he's nothing of of the sort," she said one day, petulantly, to Mrs. Gus. "And you told me he was a regular ladies' man, too," she said reproachfully. "Why, he has scarcely spoken to me since he came " Gus answered, carelessly. "He is a ladies' man, but he's so dreadfully fa tidious. He says there isn't a girl in the hotel worth troubling about-and he really does despise derstand what a pitiable-looking object he is with his hay colored hair and beard." "It is horrible homely, isn't it? Well, to tell the truth, Elsie, if I were you I Elsie's face to his. wouldn't trouble myself about him, even if he gives you the chance. And then E'sie's head went up very proudly and she walked past her special enemy with her haughtiest air, and flashed him a glance from her shining eyes that was neant to be annihilating. Two hours afterward Mr. Roy Wyllys was enjoying an after-dinner cigar on the almost deserted hetel piazza, when Mr Cameron came along, lazy and good na-"What are you philosophizing about, old

"I remember you did after 1 mentioned Elsie to you. By the way, you knew that Miss Dellonico was to be at the hop tonight? The fair empress-like blonde, one of the Dellonico girls, isn't it?"

"Is it? Really, I've forgotten whether she is hay colored-blonde, I mean, or not. so your sister in law pities me, does she, Cameron? And makes fun of me, eh? Well, I'll punish her."

Cameron langhed. "You couldn't do it, Roy. Elsie can go two to your one every day." And Mr. Roy Wyllys laid awake at least an hour of the precious time usually devoted to an afternoon nap, thinking-smok-

Elsic Eyre was a revelation that night at the hop. She was one of those people who light up marvelously, and it was the first time Mr. Wyllys had seen her in full dress, and Mabel Dellonico, in blue ribbon and white Swiss, looked like a piece of faded with artistic folds of black Spanish lace, her great dusky eyes shining with girlish sun-kissed cherries, and Mr. Wyllys, in irreproachable evening costume, dancing de voted attendance upon the fair Miss Del-lonico, was not so devoted but that he noticed how bewitchingly radiant Miss Eyre was, and how divinely she danced. "I'll ask her, 'hay-colored' or what not," he resolved, and forthwith went up to her. to find on her tablets the very last dance of all not yet taken.

And she gave it to him, and when it was ended, at least one of them was sorry the hop was over, and that he couldn't enjoy

"Didn't Roy Wyllys look distressingly nomely to-night! I declare, Elsie, if his superb dancing hadn't redeemed him I should have been mortified to have you he used to be. Something or other has come over him."

"Did he really look so funny? I didn't observe. But what a pleasant person he can be-for a man-when he tries." "Now, Elsie, I beg you will not allow yourself to become the least interested. You must not positively. He is so dread-"Well, then, cover your tracks and don't fully changed, such a cynic and so sarca let her suspect you are controlling her. Try the rule of contraries, Minnie. Talk to come down.
