

The Canada-France-Hawaii telescope sits in the clear, cold air atop Hawaii's tallest mountain, Mauna Kea. Its location, in terms of viewing clarity, is more distant from the ocean surrounding the island than it is from space. In SCIENCE DIMENSION 1984#1, a comprehensive story on land-based optical astronomy will look into the work being done by the astronomers who use the telescope to view the stars.