HOW NEW YORK RECEIVED NEWS

And War Bulletins—Crowds Strongly Favor England.

(From The New York Herald)

The war fever swept over Herald square with almost unprecedented vigor last night.

Gathered from the peoples of all the earth 5,000 persons, men and woman, still were cheering madly at midnight the records of momentous happenings abroad as they were flashed by stereopticon upon the screen erected at the Broadway side of the Herald Building by the Herald and the Evening Telegram. Great as had been the crowds to watch the bulletins on every previous night since the European conflict assumed alarming proportions, they were outside last night to such an extent that, except for an almost crawling surface car service, vehicular and pedestrian traffic in Broadway was effectually blocked.

Men of Ten Nations Sing.

Plainly the courses of events in the capitals of Continental Europe, as well as the fighting in the more inaccessible places of the belligerent nations, met the approval of those in the throng. Cheers of enthusiasm greeted every one of the bulletins.

Perhaps more national anthems than ever before were sung on a single spot were observed and resounding throughout the night. Men and women, bearing tiny British flags, crossed with the Stars and Stripes, who had just finished singing "God Save the King," joined with equal fervor in aiding the band of French men nearly when they began to sing the Marseillaise. Even the Star Spangled Banner, the "Red, White and Blue," America and "Marching through Georgia," were picked up by the crowd and sung in proof of their good feeling.

Wild Enthusiasm Shown.

But it was the news in the bulletins that fascinated the crowds and keyed them up to the unusual pitch of excitement which marked every moment of the night. Almost uncontrollable was the enthusiasm that greeted the bulletin reporting unconfirmed assertions that two German cruisers, endeavoring to capture the Lusitania, of the Cunard line, had been attacked and sunk by the British naval vessels conveying the steam ship off the coast of Maine. Britons and Frenchmen threw their hats into the air and danced and shouted until they were unable longer to speak above a whisper.

Similar scenes greeted the bulletins that told of the plucky Servians driving back Austrian troops from the Servian borders and then forming an army of invasion that entered Austria.

The Britons and Americans, however, led the cheering and singing, following the appearance of bulletins announcing that the American Hospital in Paris had been turned over to the use of the French army; that an American woman in England had offered her estate as a place to care for the wounded soldiers; and that American women everywhere in Europe were offering their services to the Red Cross.

Narrow Escape.

What might have been a serious accident took place at Kinnmount, last week at the home of Mr. Henry Boldt. The bull struck Le in the back, throwing him into the lake; then Mr. Boldt, hearing the noise, rushed to help the boy, when the enraged animal turned on him, and threw him into the lake also. Mr. Boldt had on to the staff attached to a ring in the animal's nose. The boy by this time got out of the lake and managed to get away. The bull followed.
