All is ready. The mirrath-performing. Shick, who has passed the night and the morning in fasting and prayer, is now seen approaching, unbread also by banners and more Dervishes, who dart to the end, and also fiing themselves along the continuing line, ever well into the tests of the Shiek. Thus follows the most revolting scene which has greeted the human eyes since the suppression of the Indian car Juggerrant, of which most probably the Doseh is an imitation. This lonely man, passed the middle age, in the gread robes of his alling, and under a turbust as addly out of proportion as a frum any of the work in a middle age, in the gread robes of his alling, and under a turbust as addly out of proportion as a frum any of the work in the month of the state, a Shiek leads him forward; he mounts the line of prostrike grinning forms; is steadied on aither side by one or to assisting men who hold the Shiek. At a good pace the horne follows the sci, who has dropped the rein mal now only guides, and other three assistants keep their hold, and all with horse and rule treading full on the bodies, hand and shoulders, and legs and ribe alite. Nothing is heard but the continuing invections, and the multitude look on in silence and with palpitating breasts.
