HELEN MOIR

—OR— LOVE AND HONOUR.

A TALE OF THE CLYDE. CHAPTER XXXV.

RESTORATION—THE FAST-SPREADING BRIGHTNESS.

"Well, Ritchie," cried Helen, "what are we to say of this? Is it better than the Clyde?"
"Oh, it's grand; it's very, very grand," answered Ritchie, as he drew a long breath.
"It's just like a fairy scene in a pantomime, only the fairy is you," said Miss Helen, who added in a little, and with a deprecating shake of her head, "there's nothing like Bannockburn of Glenmoss, and it wants the young people heather and the curling irons."
"A very fine old building," said Mr. Moir.
"The thing is, Helen, and the Clyde in Scotland both are best."
"And," added Edwin, "when we are in Scotland we prefer the Clyde; when we are in Germany we prefer the Rhine. So, as we are Germany now, we shall all be Rhine worshippers—most sincere, most devout, most enthusiastic. Eh, Ritchie?"
"Dear me, sir, that we will; for, after all, it's a glorious sight."
After feasting on the splendid scene to their hearts' content, the carriages moved forward in the descending path, and soon they were moving under the cool shadows of the trees, and obtaining glimpses of the river through still openings in the foliage.

Arrived at Natchford, and willing up the broad avenue to Rheinbach Villa, a joyous welcome awaited them from Madam Rheinbach and Mignon Lessing, who had been there a fortnight, and had been deterred from proceeding to Germany on the assurance given them that Hermann was improving, and would soon be at the Villa.

The meeting between him and his mother was tender in the extreme. At sight of his wasted frame she burst into tears, so altered was he from the strong manly youth who had left her not two months before. But his bright smile and hopeful words cheered her, and when he pointed to Helen as his good angel through all his distress, the overjoyed mother pressed the fair girl to her bosom, and gave her a mother's thanks and blessing.

Mignon, too—the gay and lively Mignon—received Hermann with much tears and laughter, and Helen with hearty kisses, almost in her rapture kissed the Herr and Fräulein, shook Ritchie vigorously by the hand, and only blushed and hesitated in confusion when Edwin presented himself for her reception. At that momentary scene the glances from the eyes of both, which met each other as they face to face, their mutual love was fully betrayed, if not to themselves, at least to those who were looking on, and the satisfaction produced was genuine and universal.

The days that followed were days full of happiness and quiet, peaceful joy, and, as the doctor had predicted, brought to Hermann rapid health and strength. All day long the young folk were to be found rambling among the vineyards, or sailing over the blue and glassy waters of the river—Mignon and Edwin in one boat, and Helen and Hermann in another—the latter being rowed by Ritchie, not the least proud and happy of the group.

Of course, the two boats were often to be found not very close company, the lovers occasionally going away in different directions, in obedience to certain promptings of the heart which can easily be guessed at. What circumstances could be more favorable to the growth and outcome of affection? What wonder that Edwin and Mignon were so speedily betrothed?

As for Hermann and Helen, their bliss was beyond description, arising at once from their exalted natures, the depth and intensity of their love, and the great and grand trials to which their love had been subjected. This last was perhaps the chief element in their exquisite cup of joy. If faithfulness to duty, if maintained integrity ever produces satisfaction of soul; how abundant must that satisfaction have been in the case of Helen and Hermann, who had so nobly stood the severest tests to which they had been subjected. What a recollection had they to dwell upon of unvalued and accepted sacrifice, the fruit of which had come to them in their present cloudless happiness, which was doubly sweet because it was the realized reward of former faith and resolve.

And so the autumn passed away, and Edwin left them to join his mother in England. At the end of September, she had quitted Ardenham and gone to Allerton Hall. She, too, had had a time of great anxiety and suspense, which had its relief only in the receipt of letters from Edwin, in which he kept her apprised of all that took place at Gorse, and it was with heartfelt thankfulness she learned of Hermann's progress towards convalescence, and the removal of the party to the Villa on the Rhine, at which place she had the expectation of joining them ere long.

Yes; for the interesting information must now be communicated that before Edwin left Natchford, and before the Herr departed for Glasgow—which he required to do for business considerations—it had been settled that on a day near to Christmas the double marriage should be celebrated, when Mignon Lessing should change her German name for that of Allerton, and when Helen should be no longer known by the name either of Moir or Allerton, but, as Hermann's wife, become a youthful Madame Rheinbach.

This was the happy prospect before them when Edwin left to arrange matters at Allerton Hall, and make preparations for the bringing home of his bride. About the middle of December he was to return accompanied by his mother, whose presence on the occasion was specially requested by Mignon—a request with which, as many naturally would suppose, Mrs. Allerton was very glad to comply.

"Now, let me find you quite recovered and quite strong when I return," was Edwin's parting injunction to Hermann as they separated at the gateway of the steamer that was to take the former down the river.

"I have every hope that I shall," was Hermann's reply and he had good reason to hope so, for would he not spend the intervening weeks of winter in the salubrious air of the Rhine, and in the sweet inspiring society of his betrothed?

Erin Correspondence.
Erin seems to have been lost sight of in the columns of your valuable and widely circulated paper, for some time, especially since the Railway excitement has apparently subsided. Although we say the excitement has abated for a short time, yet we hope to rise at no distant day with renewed vigor, and work until night and morn until the snorting iron horse is heard speeding on its way through this village and township.

We will briefly notice a few of the improvements and changes recently taken place here. Messrs. McMillan, Lott Bros. have their large foundry and machine shop enclosed, and will soon have it in full blast for the manufacture of all kinds of farming implements.

Mr. H. Milloy has also fitted up a fine blacksmithshop in the old Shutter saw-mill. The fuses and lathes are at present driven by water power. He also intends to fit up trip-hammers, and other machinery for general blacksmithing, and for the manufacture of his celebrated ploughs.

Mr. John Walker is still carrying on the foundry and blacksmithing business, and manufacturing largely a new plough, which is said to be a good one. Mr. Hood has been in Erin village for some time, and he has received the new impetus which it has received will enable the manufacturer to supply the large demand for them.

A. Hood, Esq., with his family left this place a few days ago to take charge of a business in Worcester. Mr. Hood has been in business in Erin village for upwards of thirteen years, and during that time accumulated a large amount of property; but he says that through disinterested clock and partners he has recently lost it heavily. He has now sold all his property in Erin. Two years ago he sold his beautiful residence to Mr. R. Wood, druggist, and last fall his brick store and stock to Mr. Charles Ferguson. Mr. Hood was considered a straightforward, honest man, in all his dealings, and we believe has left Erin with a clean sheet, which we are glad to say has not been the case with all the merchants who left before. For the last few years the place seems to have been a rendezvous for unprincipled men, who wished to make a haul and leave for Uncle Sam's. There is now another bankrupt stock, that of J. B. Conboy's, being sold off, which we hope will be the last for many years to come. The remedy is in the hands of whole-sale dealers. If they would adopt the cash system or require good security, there would not be so many bankrupt stocks for sale, to the injury of those who wish to do an honest business. Although it seems to have been the case in Erin, however, it may be elsewhere, that any person could get a stock of goods, to any amount, without cash, security, or even character. We hope this state of things will now be at an end, and that wholesale dealers will be more careful in future to whom they sell.

The Rev. J. A. Thomson, Presbyterian minister of this place, left last week for Scotland. For some time past his health has been failing, until he found himself unable to discharge his duties. He obtained leave of absence for five months from the Presbytery. The congregation of Erin presented him with a purse containing $207, and Caledonia congregation with $72, as a token of the high esteem in which he is held by them.

The crops in general look well in this township, with the exception of the fall wheat, a great deal of which has had to be ploughed down and the land re-sowed. There is a great show of fruit this season, and if we are spared from summer frosts, and moisture continues, we expect to reap a beautiful harvest.

Erin village, June 5th, 1872.

Johnson's Anodyne Liniment will give more relief in cases of Chronic Rheumatism, no matter how severe, than any other article known to medical men.

After twenty-five years' medical experience, we have never met with a remedy worthy of dependence in any disease of the lungs, until the discovery of Farrow's Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites. This article really is reliable, and successful in a majority of cases.

WHEELER'S COMPOUND ELIXIR OF THE PHOSPHATES AND CALA-
SAYA contains chemical substances calculated to cell growth and the formation of the system. Dr. Duggan, a celebrated Physiologist of London, has analyzed this Elixir, and is of opinion that it is an excellent agent in the formation of the cellular shape, and that it controls the formation of tissues. When taken into the system, more food is absorbed, and the weight of the body is rapidly increased, owing to the transformation of albumen into muscle and bone.

Sufferers from imperfect nutrition, as in scurvy and tuberculous diseases, will derive immediate benefit from its use. It is sold wholesale and retail, by all Druggists.
