May Davenport's troupe of variety actresses appeared at the Grand Opera House last evening, and played to a fairly good house, composed entirely or men. Patrons of this style of performance expect an exhibition of physical rather than vocal or artistic attractiveness and the performance was up to the average in that respect. None of the company possess vice worth mention, but their fun provoked some laughter.

A Great Minstrel Show.

The Cleveland Minstrels have a stronger troupe on the road this season than ever before, and will undoubtedly attract a jammed house to-morrow evening. The following is a criticism by the New York Dramatic News: "There were upheavals of applause and hurricanes of laughter. It was a red-letter day in minstrelsy. It was a long bill, but none too long for the enthusiastic audience. These great burntcork comedians supplied the fun: Billy Emerson, Hughey Dougherty, John Queen, Marcus Doyle and Burt Shepard. There was enough vocal and instrumental music to supply two grand concerts. From the reception, we verily believe that the combined troupes could take the Metropolitan Opera House and fill it for half the scason. Those marvelous Japanese jugglers were also 'aggregated,' and gave a splendid finale to the show."
