

Doctors Uphold It.

Dr. A. E. HALL, one of the leading physicians of Buffalo, N. Y., writes the S. C. Wells Co. of Toronto, as follows: "I am glad to testify that Shiloh's Consumption Cure is a specific for coughs of every form and I am prepared to say that it is a remedy that has been brought to my attention. Indeed I believe it is a cure for consumption in its first stages. It is of course one of the common run to cure a cough, but the value of your remedy is so evident that I, for one, have waived professional considerations and send this hoping it may be received in the same spirit in which it is written."

Cures a Cough in a Night When taken at night

You mustn't think it's meant only for Consumption because it is called a Consumption Cure. Just for the single reason that it does cure consumption, it is better than anything else for sudden colds and coughs. And there isn't an intelligent mother in the country who doesn't keep it constantly on hand for croup, whooping cough, etc.

Another thing—SHILOH is a preventive as well as a cure. It is a general tonic for the whole body and so builds up and strengthens it, that cold and consumption can get no foothold. This is not idle talk. It is a fact. It has been proved thousands of times, and what is stronger than proof?

Try it on that cold to night, and be cured in the morning.

Shiloh's Consumption Cure is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee that the purchaser money will be refunded in case of failure. 25c, 50c, and $1. A bottle in Canada and United States. In England 1s. 2d., 2s. 3d. and 4s. 6d.

The Queen's Veil.

He then returned to the spot where he found her, to see if any traces of her fall remained. He recovered her hat, and one of her gloves, and with these tell-tale articles out of the way, no one would ever suspect the thrilling accident that had transpired there under that frowning cliff.

The girl lay unconscious, and taking a tumbler from the coach box, the man went down to the margin of the sea and procured some water, with which he bathed her face and hands, working vigorously over her for several minutes. In the coach box there was a bottle of wine, which he had brought along to sooth himself with by the way, he poured some of this between Tina's lips and had the satisfaction of seeing her swallow.

"She will live," he said, a flash of joy illumined his face. Almost as he said it, Tina opened her eyes, and gazed with look of wonder into the eager face bending over her. The look of wonder almost instantly changed into one of terror, and with a shudder she put up her hand and weakly tried to push him away from her.

She had recognized Monsieur La Fort! A scowl distorted his face, and he drew back out of sight, and stood thinking for a moment. He then took a small vial from his pocket, poured a few drops into the glass, to which he added wine from the bottle, and holding this to her lips told her to drink.

She was too weak and faint yet to realize much; the wine was pleasant to her taste, and she swallowed it thirstily. Monsieur La Fort then drew the curtains of the carriage over the windows, shut the door, climbed to the driver's box, and turning round rapidly in the direction from which he had come.

He did, indeed, seem as if the fates had favored him, for he had come to the Isle of Wight for the very purpose of abducting Tina, if he could find her, and he was even then bound to the island, intending to fasten his horses in some secluded spot near the earl's grounds, and there await the opportunity he could either meet his victim or find some way to lure her from the mansion and get her into his power.

He had only a few days previously discovered whether the family had gone; he had haunted the vicinity of their city residence, and had rapidly learned their very schemes, and followed them immediately to their country seat.

He was in high spirits now over the success of his scheme and the unexpected and easy manner in which it had been accomplished, although his delight was somewhat dimmed by the fear that the night would suffer some internal injury from her fall that would prove fatal, and it would be a bad thing to have her die upon his hands. He kept stopping every little while to see if she appeared to be sleeping soundly from the drug that he had put in her wine, but no indication of fever, and he tried to hope that nothing serious would result from the accident.

He drove directly to Cowes, reaching there just a little before it was time for the boat to leave that was to cross the channel.

It was quite dark, and engaging a man to assist to get his sick daughter on board, the removal was accomplished without either awaking Tina or attracting undue attention.

danger of her claiming assistance if she should awake. It was nearly ten o'clock when they arrived in London, and a Portmanteau was conveyed to some quiet lodging, where he could obtain medical advice to assure himself that she had sustained no serious injury, and then, as soon as he should be able to travel, compel her to return to Brussels with him.

He had resolved to try to win her by every art of which he was capable, and if this failed, he would work upon her fears by still holding the consequences of that theft over her until she would be glad to consent to go with him. He found little difficulty in conveying her from the coupe on their arrival to a carriage, for she had partially recovered from the shock occasioned by the drug, and was able to walk with assistance, although she did not seem to realize whom she was with as

It was half-past ten when the carriage stopped before a respectable house in St. John's Terrace. La Fort never mistrusted what he was doing when he took her there; he had chosen this locality because it was quiet and retired, and a long distance from the earl's city residence.

The cool night air, and the motion of the carriage over the rough pavement brought Tina pretty thoroughly to herself, and she began to remember what had happened to her, and to realize the fact that she had been caught in a very disagreeable trap.

When she first awoke to a knowledge of this fact, the shock occasioned by it did more toward restoring her scattered senses than anything else. She was weak and lame from her fall, and her head felt light and giddy, but, to her astonishment, she was not seriously injured.

She knew she was in Monsieur La Fort's power—how was a mystery to her—that he had brought her to London, and would probably use every means in his power to compel her into a marriage with him.

But when the carriage turned into St. John's Terrace he heard a sudden sound of joy. She recognized the locality at once; she knew every landmark, and that she was not far from the lodgings of Barbara Beza, who had charged her to let her know if monsieur ever came near again, and this she resolved to do now it was possible.

"Where are you taking me?" she demanded abruptly of monsieur, just before the carriage stopped. He sprang from his seat as if he had been shot.

"On foot!" he said, as he helped her out of the carriage. "How does she feel? Is she badly injured from her fall?" he asked, eagerly.

"Where are you taking me?" she repeated, ignoring his questions entirely. "To a place of safety, ma belle, where we can have rest and rest assured. I drive along a road, I find you half dead, I know not what to do, I take you in my carriage and bring you where we can have the advice of monsieur le docteur. Mademoiselle is still weak and faint. She will have some wine?" and he produced a bottle and glass.

She appeared so nearly restored to her normal condition, and was so composed, that the drug suggested itself to his mind again. He began to fear that she should have trouble with her when they came to night.

"No, I want no more of that drug," she said, quietly.

"Drug, mon Dieu. It is the best Falklandian, mademoiselle," the Frenchman cried, in well-learned surprise, but somewhat crest-fallen, that she should readily have comprehended his design.

A DELICIOUS COMBINATION

Pure Malt and Choice Wheat

Known as

Malt Breakfast Food.

A Breakfast Relish for the Strong and Weak.

Thousands of people dare not use oatmeal in any form, as they find it has a tendency to irritate the stomach, excite heat and redness of the skin and produce eruptions. Then again cracked wheat and other cereals contain too much insoluble starch which interferes sadly with digestion.

Malt Breakfast Food comes to the rescue of weak and strong stomachs. It does not contain a particle of insoluble starch, it is partially predigested, therefore requires no effort to digest it.

Malt Breakfast Food contains a much greater amount of body and brain nutriment than other grain foods. Its special work is in building up nerve, muscle and tissue, and enriching the blood. Malt Breakfast Food is the most delicious of all breakfast cereals. It pleases every palate and becomes a fast favorite in homes where it is tried. Your grocer and all other first-class grocers sell Malt Breakfast Food.

In the region of the Southern Urala a Russian laborer gets only 15 cents a day, and a man with a horse and a cart costs 45 cents a day.

Mr. Bartlett's rink playing Mr. Dods' a neck-and-neck game throughout, and winning by three shots, while the Ashbaugh-Hutton game was most unprecedented, 14 ends being played, with only 14 points being scored. In the whole 16 ends, in 10, there was only one end that more than one point was recorded. The Western Ontario tankard is now on. Windsor is up against Toledo, and Detroit is playing Thamesville. DUE TO COLLAPSE.

Easton, Pa., July 30.—Paddy Donovan, Philadelphia pugilist, who has been on trial for several days at Belvidere, N. J., on the charge of manslaughter, in causing the death of Frank Welch, another Philadelphia pugilist, during an exhibition fight at Philadelphia, N. J., on New Year's eve, was acquitted today. Physicians testified that death had been due to a clot of blood on the base of Welch's brain. The defense introduced evidence in the shape of two boxers, who gave a reproduction in court of the fight to show that no heavy blows had been struck during the fight, and that Welch's death was due entirely to collapse.
