It is an interesting calculation in reviewing the part that magazines have sie had to pay, as a man, be mad tives never so tinctured with good, has played in the wide dissemination of literature to figure out what the reader receives during the year. For one dollar-less than the price of the average novel—a magazine such as the Cosmopolitan sends fifty complete stories, one long novel, more than one thousand beautiful illustrations, twenty articles on popular science, invencles on travel, twenty essays on the most important things to know regardg home life, marriage, choice of profession, etc., and twenty articles for young women and men.

THE SILVER POPPY. ' The Chicago Record-Herald has the following review of Mr. Arthur Stringer's new novel, The Silver Poppy, which at the present time is attracting the attention of all the reviewers:

The Silver Poppy of Arthur Stringer is a well-knit, intensely absorbing novel, which leaves the old question of how much allowance must be made for sinners with mixed motives still unanswered. The heroine is a woman with an insatiable greed for fame, who stole books and published them over her own name, and the principal man is a young Englishman, whom she made a tool of, for the sake of his literary Awakening to love for the time, she sought to make amends, but was never strong enough to make them complete, and at last was tossed aside by him, wrecked, broken and condemned to mean expedients ever after. "It is the ebb-tide of love that shows the mud-flats of the soul.' She was a delicate, spiritualized creature, who looked to him "like a piece of fragile chinaware, with which the slag of everyday life had not yet been infused, sadly to convert it into the ironstone of ordinary mortality." The study of her quiet, insistent pursuit of her own ends is the triumph of this unusually well-told and well-planned story. Poetic to the eye, she is hard as nails underneath. She steals a dying man's book, makes a tool of the man who loves her, withstands her impulse to give him credit in print for his help; but, weak as she acts, she loves him devotedly. She bargains like a Jew for every cent she can get out of their new novel, but lacks all strength to fulfill her promise to have her lov- ple and business men. er's name appear as collaborator, and she lies to him about it, uselessly, it

Manlike, Mr. Stringer dresses her, a bronze-haired woman, always in yellow, puts her in a yellow study, sends her driving in a yellow-bodied Victoria, yellow roses at her throat-and once he rests her, dressed in salmon, against a Princeton cushion. Though poetic in the telling, that unrestful coloring being typical of the woman, it must have been rather "yeller jandery"

Throughout an insistent holding-on to every vestige of fame is shown by the woman, but the intergrowth of love for John Hartley between the hard walls of her old selfishness, promising We are left to wonder at the had been strong enough to remember only that she loved him and to endure worked a transformation in her. to work complete reformation. OUTING FOR SEPTEMBER Sir Thomas Lipton's third attempt to trotter. lift the America's cup is the leading subject in September Outing, Sailing a Cup Defender, The Evolution of the Racing Yacht Model, The Men Who Have Defended America's Cup, and A Critical Comparison of Shamrock and Reliance, being some of the able articles touching that subject. Those interested in fishing will enjoy Grover Harris, and Leonidas Hubbard's (jun.) Off-Days on Superior's North Shore. For those who shoot, Edwin Sandys has Game Field in September are also timely and interesting articles along these lines. Lively short sketches in great variety also crowd the handsomelyprinted pages of Outing for September, and most of the articles are profusely illustrated. There is plenty of good fiction, too, in this number, the writers being A. E. McFarlane, Frederick Moulton Alger and Frank H. Spear-

The Wyoming Game Stronghold, another of Frederick Irland's remarkable articles on the little known wilderness regions of this continent, leads the September number of Scribners. It deals with the great valley between the Shoshone and Wind River Mountains on the east, and the Tetons on the west, where antelopes by the hundred and elk by thousands make their homes. Thomas Bailey Aldrich gives a charming sketch, Tom Folio, an oid bookworm, and disciple of Lamb, Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts, gives good stories of Some Famous Judges in this number. In the fiction department, choice reading is supplied by Mrs. Wharton, F. Hopkinson Smith, Marguerite Merrington, Lucia Chamberlain and Beatrice Hascom. Evans, in face of the showing of his crack filly, Libby Queen, 2:20 trial, 2:131/2 in the Kentucky Stock Farm purse at Brighton Beach last week, when both Ethel's Pride Mary Gage beat her out, left the daughter of Expidition in the east to try once more against the cracks of he age of that section in the rich Hartford Futurity. In case she is again defeated, the gray filly will have another to go with the daughter of Directum and Ben Kenney's crack in the Kentucky Futurity, both the eastern stars being engaged in the great $21,000 Kentucky event. Bob Burdette, the son of Ber nadotte, in Clem Beachy, Jun.'s. stable, which colt also raced in the Brigh-Beach event, has been returned here to his quarters at the Kentucky Breeders' Association grounds, as however, is also a certain starter in the long price for this colt while Brighton Beach, but he is owned by two or three different parties, and they could come to no agreement regarding the sum they were willing to take for their different interests in the son of Bernadotte. The owners of the noted stallion, Gambetta Wilkes, predict that by the close Batteries—Pittinger and Moran; Mitchell of 1903 the great son of George Wilkes will have 150 performers to his credit in the 2:30 list. In this respect he is to date the leading sire of the season up to Aug. 20, he having put 23 in the charmed circle this year. Gambetta Wilkes is now 22 years old, probably the youngest living son of the immortal George Wilkes. He has scored his present high achievement as a sire in six-Cincinnati ........0000100001 7 4 teen years' stud service, the first of his get entering the list in 1890. Recent reports from Danville say he is a wonderfully preserved horse, and his admirers predict that before his career is ended he will hold the world's re-
