TWO GIRLS BADLY HURT WHEN HORSE BOLTED

An Unfortunate Accident During the Speed Trials at New Hamburg Fair.

(Special to The Advertiser.)

Stratford, Sept. 21.—As soon as the Ontario Railway and Municipal Board gives the word of authority, a new $7,000 steel straight-girder bridge will be built across the narrows of Victoria Lake at Waterloo street. The board of health asked for a $5,000 grant for three brick isolation cottages in connection with the General Hospital.

Jeffrey & Abraham, commercial printers, have dissolved partnership, and Mr. Alex. Abraham has assumed full charge of the business. The dissolution papers were drawn up yesterday.

During the speed trials at the New Hamburg Fair Friday, one of the saddle horses bolted for the grandstand, knocking down two girls, Miss Ruby Lennox and Miss Tillie Kurlik. Miss Lennox had her collarbone broken and her feet injured, while her companion received more serious internal injuries, rendering her unconscious until Saturday evening.

On Oct. 2 the local Y. M. C. A. intend holding an open athletic meet, consisting of ten events including walks, runs and weight-throwing. Mr. Gus Campbell, a local junior shot-putter will break the Canadian record on this occasion, having done so a number of times already in practice meets.

HALL APPEARS ON PERJURY CHARGE

Case Adjourned Until Tuesday and Bail Allowed in $2,000.

Alfred Hall, of Port Stanley, appeared before Magistrate Glenn, in St. Thomas last night to answer to a charge of perjury. The case was adjourned until Tuesday next and Hall was allowed out on $2,000 bail, $1,000 of which was furnished by himself, $500 by Mrs. Hall, and $500 by Mr. Earl, of this city. Hall was arrested in connection with a recent case which was heard before the county magistrate.

PEARY DECLINES ALL RECEPTIONS

Until Controversy With Cook Over North Pole Is Settled.

EELIRIUM AT BROOKLYN

Fellow Citizens' Welcome to Pole Discoverer Partook of Nature of Riot.

New York, Sept. 22.—Herbert L. Bridgman, secretary of the Peary Arctic Club, who accompanied Mrs. Peary northward to join her husband, said last night, when informed of Commander Peary's refusal to appear at any public function until the polar controversy shall have been settled: "I expected this dispatch and Commander Peary's action will meet the approval of his friends. Only tentative plans for his reception have been made and even these were held in abeyance because it was believed he would prefer his friends should await word from him before they committed him. This announcement will therefore cause no inconvenience."

There is disappointment in the city at large, however, and particularly in the Hudson-Fulton committee, which had placed Peary's name on the naval parade committee before he sailed north and had eagerly hoped for his return in time to add glory to the celebration.

Sydney, C. B., Sept. 21.—The steamship Sheeha, with Mrs. Peary and her children, Col. H. D. Borup, the father of George Borup, a member of the Peary expedition, among others on board, went out again this morning to meet the incoming Roosevelt. At nine o'clock the expected ship was sighted off Low Point, and immediately all the carefully rehearsed plans for Peary's reception began to be put into execution.

At 7 o'clock, so Mr. Ross said, the Roosevelt had been sighted by his skipper, bearing down from St. Paul's Island, who had run out to meet the polar ship. Here a surprise lay in store for Commander Peary. As the Sheeha drew alongside, Bobby Peary, in his immaculate sailor blue, stood on the bridge, waving his big silk American flag and shouting "Welcome, Peary!" to the ship. Captain Bartlett, on the Roosevelt's bridge, spotted the boy and his mother on the yacht. Bartlett had a message down to the commander in a hurry, and Peary came running out of his cabin. The Sheeha lowered a boat with the explorer and his wife exchanged long-distance greetings.

Then Mrs. Peary, Miss Peary, Robert, Jun., and Col. Borup were rowed over to the Roosevelt's ladder. Mr. Ross said that Commander Peary did not wait at the rail to greet his wife, where all the crews of both vessels could see, but that he went to his cabin, and there Mrs. Peary and her children went to find the man they had waited for alone. It was nearly 1 o'clock when the spindling masts of the Roosevelt showed above the tops of trees that crown the headland beyond town.

Hanging from the lanyards out at the tip of the mizen spar were the words "Thank you" in whirling code bunting, a permanent courtesy which the Roosevelt sported all the way down the harbor. But above the string of flags was the one which set the lips ashore to buzzing. It was a dentail, for there surely would have been some serious strife ensuing. A woman had her ankle badly twisted and had to be helped off to a lounge inside, but beyond that there were no long American flag, with a broad white strip sewed to it from the top-most star of the union, diagonal down to the outer tip of the lower strip. Across the white slash, in letters of black, were the words "North Pole."

Slowly the Roosevelt nosed in against the Cape Breton Electric Company's wharf, at the foot of the heights, where stood the Sydney folks, and lines were made up and the gangway was thrown down from the forward deck of the polar craft, the silk-hatted committee, headed by Mayor Richardson, stepped forward to present the freedom of Cape Breton and all the neighbors to the commander. After official functions were gone through with, something happened about which the inner circles of Sydney had been agog for a week. Miss Naomi Louise Kehl, the 14-year-old daughter of the American consul, stepped forward and handed to the commander a bouquet of asters, which was formed in the shape of a globe with an American flag, its staff picturing the round mass of blossoms, fluttering from the North Pole of the bouquet.

It was not the bouquet that was interesting, as the fact that precedence had been established by a tour de force. Bitter had been the acrimony over tencups in the matter of whether the daughter of the American consul or the daughter of the Canadian mayor should be the one to present the hero from the north with the floral compliments of Sydney. Finally, by common consent, it had been decided that each daughter should present a bouquet, and the question of who should do it first was left open to circumstances, and the ingenuity of the papas. Hence Sydney's momentary thrill when Miss Naomi beat Miss Gladys Myrtle Richardson to Peary's side.

NO RACE THIS YEAR.

Toronto, Sept. 21.—Eddie Durnan, the carsman, said today that there was no chance for a race with Arnet, the world's champion, this year. Arnet, he said, wanted to row him here Oct. 15, but he had declined because of the late date. Groer also backed up when offered a race with a side bet. Durnan is ready to row anybody, but he says his first race will probably be with Arnet next July.

DIES IN PRISON.

Toronto, Sept. 20.—Wm. Seay, the negro, who was sentenced by Chief Justice Falconbridge to 20 years' imprisonment in Kingston Penitentiary for attempted murder of his white wife, died yesterday in the prison. The attempted murder took place on Booth avenue, in Riverdale, and the man fired two shots at his wife, but did not inflict any dangerous wound. The case was a peculiar one, as Mrs. Seay was the daughter of a rich man in the Southern States, and she was apparently well educated and refined. Seay worked as a coachman for her father, and she married him. The attempted murder was the result of the man's jealous temper.

VISION BY PHONE.

Mexico City, Sept. 22.—Alberto Sanchez, an electrical engineer, at claims to have invented an apparatus whereby vision as well as voice may be transmitted over an ordinary telephone wire. He calls his invention teleradiation and the prison officials teleradiation and the prison officials admit that successful tests have been made with models. It is stated the contrivance resembles short opera glasses attached to a battery.

steps of the official carriage and driven to the hotel in company with Mayor Richardson and Consul Kehl. Mayor Peary, her two children, and Captain Bob occupied a second carriage.

Peary's Speech.
As the carriages moved through the crowd to the hotel the crowd cheered. Arriving at the hotel Mayor Richardson alighted, ascended the steps and read a hearty and official welcome to Peary, who remained in the carriage, on behalf of the Government and people of the town. That done, Miss Richardson handed up the second bouquet. Then Commander Peary rose and in a neat speech expressed the pleasure that he felt in the eloquent and friendly words of the mayor, and said that because of his frequent visits to Sydney, he had begun to look on its people as friends.

"Once," he added, "I brought back with me the record of farthest north, and once the largest meteorite in the world. Today, thank God, I've brought back the pole."

Here hearty cheers interrupted the commander.

"If there is anything in this work of mine," he continued, "it is this, that if a man devotes himself to the accomplishment of one thing and sticks to it long enough, makes it the object of his whole life, he is bound to win."

Just as the commander finished this last word there was a cracking of timbers, and a section of the front porch of the hotel upon which a packed mass of people was standing, sunk three feet. That it did not go further, seemed at the time more than providential, and the incident was soon forgotten.

Mayor Richardson proposed three cheers for Peary, and they were given. Then he set going three more for Bartlett, the Newfoundlanders. These were also given with a will. Captain Bartlett is one of kin with these Cape Breton people, and the idol of every fisherman. They yelled for speech, and Bob grew pink, then scarlet. Finally he delivered himself thuswise:

"Some seven or eight years ago," said he, "I made up my mind that if I could command a ship for Commander Peary I would want nothing better, and here I am. When we returned to Sydney from the last trip north I was sure that we would win out next time, and we have, praise God."

"Citizens, I wish you could see that man there," (pointing at Commander Peary). "I wish you could see the man who has gone ahead all the way to the pole and breaking trail, then you'd know why it is I'm proud to say that Peary nailed the Star and Stripes to the North Pole."

After that an impromptu levee was held at the carriage steps. People stood in line to pass before Peary's carriage and shake his hands. At the conclusion of the levee Commander Peary went into the hotel, and spent the rest of the afternoon, receiving friends who had come to Sydney from distant cities. The night he spent alone with his family. He will leave on the 7 o'clock train for the States tomorrow. He would go straight to Eagle Island, he said, and he could not tell how long he would remain at his summer home there.

New York, Sept. 21.—From 5 o'clock this morning the explorer intermittently paced the saloon deck of his steamer, placing his marine glasses to his eyes, and watching every tug or vessel which approached the Oscar II. At last the clock, a little ill at ease, struck twelve. Dr. Cook, springing to the companionway, was down the ladder before the tug was alongside. He leaped across the intervening stretch of water to the tug and dashed up to the hurricane deck, where his wife was waiting for him, waving the Stars and Stripes as he approached. She looked pale, doubtless from excitement, as her husband folded her in his arms, and embraced her without a single word passing between them. Their hearts seemed too full for utterance.

For the moment, he even missed the children, who stood a few feet away, until his wife silently led him to them. Then, as he lifted his youngest daughter to his shoulder, the silent, watching crowd that lined the rails of the Oscar II, broke into a storm of cheers.

It had been arranged that the excursion steamer, Grand Republic, carrying Dr. Cook's friends and club mates from Brooklyn and New York, and John S. Bradley, his backer, should keep far enough in the background to give him a few minutes of first privacy with his family. But soon there followed a second transfer from the tug to the Grand Republic. As Dr. Cook set foot aboard, Miss Ida Leckie, of an old Brooklyn friend, threw a wreath of roses about his neck, and proclaimed him a "Gentleman of Bushwick."

disposal of Bushwick." Bushwick is the name of Dr. Cook's home section of Brooklyn.

Dr. Cook looked it. Positive, patient, taciturn, he endures the business of being a hero with courtesy, but no enthusiasm. As he stood beside Bradley, his backer, the contrast was apparent. Bradley looked the typical man-about-town. Cook, a little ill at ease, smiled continually in an honest sort of way, as a man wholly sure of himself, but not so certain of the impression he was making. It was a good impression, for the crowd liked the simplicity, which seemed to carry conviction.

On shore, the really formidable part of the day for Dr. Cook still awaited him. After the first rush of welcome aboard the Grand Republic, he had been able to find comparative seclusion in the pilot house. From that vantage point, he could see the streets of Brooklyn, black with thousands, long files of automobiles ready. As he stepped ashore it was noticeable that no representative of the nation, the state or the city was there to greet him. Bird S. Coler, president of the Borough of Brooklyn, had welcomed him on the Grand Republic for that borough, but the city of New York sent no official representatives.

Brooklyn's reception of Dr. Cook had all the elements of a riot except the violence. From the moment the explorer fought his way into an automobile until he left the Bushwick Club tonight for the Waldorf-Astoria in New York, the surging crowds taxed the capacity of the police, and more than once got out of control. Along the five miles of avenues through which the explorer passed to the club, the mounted police were continually fighting a way for Dr. Cook's automobile.

As the car drew up to the club, a group of Cook's friends, headed by John R. Bradley, surrounded the machine, and the children stepped out, while the crowd whooped, cheered and whistled. Dr. Cook bowed and went into the house.

After an hour's rest, during which Dr. and Mrs. Cook were entertained at luncheon by a woman's committee, the clubhouse doors were thrown open, and a public reception began. Dr. Cook bowed pleasantly to everyone, occasionally breaking the rule, and grasping the hand of some old friend.

By the time Dr. Cook had been standing there three hours, it was decided not to tax him further, although not a quarter of those waiting outside had been admitted. The crowd would cost $350,000 to install meters in all the buildings of the city, and the aldermen thought this cost put the proposal out of question. What they proposed now is to reduce the charges to the ordinary household by a certain percentage, greatly while cent. The exact amount was not decided upon. The charge for baths is $2 and for closets $3. It is proposed to reduce or wipe out these charges.

"GOLD" DISCOVERY EXCITES SANDWICH

Detroit, Sept. 22.—Sandwich is again aglow with excitement over the discovery of what the town sages say is gold. Yesterday afternoon, while engaged in putting down water pipes on the Prince road, just on the outskirts of the town, Richard McKee, a plumbing contractor, resident member of the council, and acting in the capacity as advisor to a number of town residents, dug up a considerable quantity of shiny, blinding particles, which have all the appearance of gold.

As nothing of this kind has ever been unearthed in this part of the country, a great amount of speculation has been caused by the discovery. The news spread like wildfire, and within the short space of a few moments McKee was besieged with callers. Three paths of the glistening material was gathered up by McKee and taken to his residence, and his home on Sandwich street now is the central figure of attraction. A number of townspeople stated last night that this morning they would secure a digging outfit and attempt to duplicate McKee's feat. McKee has not yet made any preparations to enter the mining business, but he will have his discovery of yesterday afternoon sent to an assay office without delay. A number of those who have called at the McKee residence are of the firm belief that the collection contains a large percentage of gold.

STANDARD FIRE ESCAPES.

Toronto, Sept. 21.—The fire department of the Province is conducting a series of experiments on fire escapes, with a view to secure one that can be standardized for the Province. The committee are assisting in this, which is part of the new policy of the department to bring up the efficiency of all licensed hotels to serve the needs of the travelling public. This afternoon the Davey automatic device, which won the prize at the late exhibition, was tested at the east wing of the buildings. The department has donated a prize of $50, and the travellers a similar sum.

HAMILTON WATER RATES.

Hamilton, Sept. 20.—The water rates revision committee this afternoon decided that although the meter system was the most equitable, yet the cost of introducing it was so great as to make it impracticable just now. City Engineer MacCallum estimated that it
