J. Manion of chancellor of the exchequer, in reviewing the British position on Ger-St. Louis, president of the Orman reparations.

"I wish to make it clear beyond al question of misapprehension," declared Sir Robert, "that we recognize to the full our obligations to pay our debt to the United States, and we do not mean in any shape or form to evade that obligation.'

Foundation of Note. The foundation of the Earl of Balfour's note was the payment of the debt to the United States, declared the chancellor, "but while this is so, we are not blind in this country to the colossal burden imposed on the nations of the world at the present time in the indebtedness of one nation to another," he said, "and we hold very strongly the view that there is no graver impediment to the re-covery of the world from the ravages of war than the extent of that debt."
Sir Robert pointed out that the British debt was greater than that of any other nation, amounting to 766,000,000, compared with £5,147,-000,000 for the United States, and £6,340,000,000 for France. The British debt was £181 per head of the population, the French £162 and the United States £47, he showed, and in these circumstances it was impossible to make the British taxpayer alone shoulder the payment of the war debts. New Inspiring Hope.

"If only the nations which fought side by side in the war had been willing to regard their subscriptions to the war as contributions to the common success," he declared, "we might have been able to rid the world
