Among the comparatively few English residents in Quebec at the time alluded to above was a young man, who bore the name of Margrave. He was a strange-looking and strange-acting man. In physique he was far above the average—tall and broad, with a noble carriage and handsome appearance. His head was of classic beauty, over which long wavelets of black hair fell back upon his shoulders, his face was one of grand composure, every lineament being perfect in its modelling, and are expression of cold impassibility hid most effectually whatever thoughts or feelings might be moving within him. His eyes shone with a strange and unnatural light, which often caused those whom he happened to look upon suddenly to experience a strange feeling, not unconnected with fear. This man spoke little to anyone, and lived irra small room in the poor quarter of the town. He lived alone and passed his time chiefly in reading from a large library of books, mostly dealing with religion, philosophy, and the black arts. He had enough money to satisfy the just claims of some poor people who relied largely upon his liberality. Numerous conjectures were made—as to his means and purpose of life; but nose were ever enlightened by himself on these topics. Indeed, he rarely spoke to any person, except the old woman who looked after his personal comfort, and a few ware ever enlightened by himself on these topics. He had received a very liberal education, and after finishing his ourriculum at Oxford, had proceeded to the continen to the continent, as was the custom, to acquire a knowledge of the world and to learn anything that pertained to the character of a gentleman which nature and education might have neglected. On this education might have neglected. On this

Italian lady, who was staying under the guardian of the state of the property of many years. Had the girl been of ordinary parentage probably means might have been found to prevent her from carrying out her natural desire for liberty; but Francesca belonged to a lineage too lofty and influential to be treated with undue severity. Moreover she was looked after by an old friend of her father and a man of much importance in Rome—one Count di Luigi, who constantly visited her—and in spite of all the attempts of her guardian to his object, the nobleman knew exactly how matters atood and determined not to be sacrificed to the greed of even the church to which he belonged. Accordingly when Francesca Colonna became of age and the cardinal had no further right to detain her against her will, sheleft the convent wherein she had passed all her early years and entered Roman society. It was not surprising that the new life revolutionized her nature. Having known nothing of the world and its ways, having had no chance of learning the meaning of luxury and pleasure, it was not a matter of much wonder that she was soon intoxicated with the new life that had opened to her. In a short der that she was soon intoxicated with the new life that had opened to her. In a short time Francesca became one of the most sought-after of women—partly from her wealth and partly from her beauty and acwealth and party from her healty and ac-complishments. She was woosd by many of the most noble menjof Italy, and not a, few foreigners of rank would have lain their fortunes at her feet; but she refused to marry and treated all offers with indif-

She was not of a strong constitution, and three years of travel and society sufficed to reduce her to a state of exhaustion and nervousness that threatened serious consequences to her health, unless she abandoned the life she was pursuing. In accordance with medical advice and friendly persuasion, she withdrew herself from the pleasures which she had so well enjoyed and sought Venice, where she hoped soon to regain perfect health. It was here that Margrave first saw her, and, seeing, fell into love on his part, for Francesca had noticed the serious disturbance on his part, for Francesca had noticed the serious disturbance on his part, for Francesca had noticed the serious disturbance on his part, for Francesca had noticed the serious disturbance on his part, for Francesca had noticed the serious disturbance on his part, for Francesca had noticed the serious disturbance on his part, for Francesca had noticed the serious disturbance on his part, for Francesca had noticed the serious disturbance on his part, for Francesca had noticed the serious disturbance on his part, for Francesca had noticed the serious disturbance on his part, for Francesca had noticed the serious disturbance on his part, for Francesca had noticed the serious disturbance on his part, for Francesca had noticed the serious disturbance on his part, for Francesca had noticed the serious disturbance on his part, for Francesca had noticed the serious disturbance on his part, for Francesca had noticed the serious disturbance on his part, for Francesca had noticed the serious disturbance on his part, for Francesca had noticed the serious disturbance on his part, for Francesca had noticed the serious disturbance on for the serious disturbance of the serious disturbance on for the serious disturbance of the serious disturban She was not of a strong constitution,

In the year — the city of Quebec was startled by a series of acts which brought consternation and horror upon all its pious inhabitants. The populace of that city were very religious and, with few exceptions, children of the Roman Catholic Inglishman with more than ordi-sure.

Margrave was not the rectuse he afterwards became. On the he was gifted with considerable of manner, which, added to genius and versatiffy of talent, him as a man far above the ordiwere very religious and, with few exceptions, children of the Roman Catholic church. It is almost needless to remark that there were, even at that remote dates many churches and chapels stoed for the worship of God, and in these edifices the worship of God, and in these edifices the wall. Imagine, then, the horror of priests and congregations alike to find continual proofs that some scoret enomy to their religion was in the habit of visiting these sacred buildings and violating their saccity by tearing to shreds and breaking to atoms the holy emblems before which the plous devotees were in the habit of pouring forth their dally prayers and adoration.

Not a week passed but some fresh evidence of sacrilege was discovered in one of another part of the city, and in spite of all precautions taken by the ministers of the holy religion, no satisfactory evidence could be found to attach the crime of murder, which brought the image-breaking to a tragic end, to any person, and no explanation has ever been offered to account for the occurrence of such vandalism. In the hope of clearing up an old mystery the following details of this strange episode in Canadian religious history are given:

thappiness. Francesca was willing to do this, and was on the point of doing as her heart prompted, when the civil power was summoned by the Church of Rome and the Englishman was forced to fly from the country alone. Means were taken to prevent Francesca from following him, but for some time a correspondence was maintained between them. At last a malignant fever took fatal hold of Francesca and she died in Rome within one year of their forced separation.

It was on learning this that Philip Margrave swore a terrible vengeance upon the church that had blasted all his earthly hopes. At no time of a very religious nature, he now abandoned faith in any form of human belief, imagining every creed to be the outcome of fear, inculated by a designing priesthcod upon a superstitious people. He became an infidel of the worst description and attacked religion, especially the Roman Cathelic faith, upon every possible occasion. For a few years he lived in Europe, without aim or hope in life; ever brooding upen the love he had lost forever, and cherishing a deadly hatred to find it. At length, acting under advice, he went to America, chiefly for the benefit to be derived from the change of soene.

Kneeling beside him, Margrave quickly drew a large knife and stabbed him to the heart; after which he fied in the manner he had after which he fied in the manner he had entered and was never seen in Quebeo again. After his disappearance, no further sacrilege occurred, and in spite of all attempts to discover the murderer of the priest and the perpetrator of the most fearful acts of blasphemy that had ever been known in the city, the matter was never cleared up.

old people like it for its wonderful power to restore to their whitening locks their original color and beauty. Middle-aged people like it because it prevents them from getting bald, keeps dandruff away, and makes the hair grow thick and strong. Young ladies like it as a dressing because it gives the hair a beautiful glossy lustre, and enables them to dress it in whatever form they wish. Thus it is the favorite of all, and it has become so simply because it disappoints no one. The valedictorian now rises and tells his admiring hearers of the wonderful power of intellect. Next year at this time he will be illustrating it at $3.50 per week with a chance to rise. because it disappoints no one.

BATOCHE!

From the Mail (Oan.) Dec. 15.

Catarrh is a muco-purulent discharge caused by the presence and development of the vege table parasite amoeba in the internal liming membrane of the nose. This parasite is the simplest living form known that lives upon organs and is only developed under favorable circumstances, and these are: Morbid state of the blood, as the blighted corpusole of tubercle, the germ poison of syphilis, mercury, toxomosa, from the retention of the effets matter of the skin, suppression, perspiration, badly ventilated sleeping apartments, and other poisons that are germinated in the blood. These poisons keep the internal lining membrane of the nose in a constant state of irritation, ever ready for the deposit of the seeds of these germs, which spread up the nostrils and down the fauces, or back of the throat causing ulceration of the throat; up the custachian tubes, causing deatness; burrowing in the vocal cords, causing hoarseness; usurping the proper structure of the bronchial tubes, ending in pulmonary consumption and death.
