FAINTED IN THE MONTREAL POST OFFICE,

A few days ago one of Montreal's estimable business men dropped apparently dead in the postoffice. Friends quickly gathered round the well-known merchant, and he was soon restored to consciousness, and conveyed without delay to his home. The family without delay to his home the family without delay to his home. The family without delay to his home. The family a revelation.

Would to heaven that such sufferers fully realized the worth and value of that grand restorer, builder and vitalizer, Paine's Celery Compound—a remedy prepared specially for the great work of nerve strengthening and flesh building.

The merchant and business man cannot, even with wealth at his command, open up a surer avenue of escape from his sufferings and troubles than by a regular and daily treatment with Paine's Celery Compound. The best people of our time—professional men, bankers, merchants and others—have had occasion to test the wonderful powers of this preparation; they have found a new life, and have not thought it derogatory to their social standing to testify strongly in its favor. Physicians, without hesitation, acknowledge its superiority over all other known remedies for bringing back to health and vigor the weak, nervous, overworked and broken-down.

without delay to his home. The family physician was summoned; he pronounced tremerchant's condition to be serious, and ordered aperiod of quiet and rest. A rundown constitution, nervousness and weakness readered the well-known business man unit for his regular duties and work.

This is no uncommon occurrence in the great business towns and cities of Canada. In nine cases out of ten, the trouble arises from overwork, close application, and business anxieties. The common laws of nature are disregarded; necessary exercise and rest is not taken; the brain becomes heavy and clouded; digestion is imperfect, and the whole nervous system suffers teribly. We usually find such men in the ranks of the sleepless, nervous, dyspeptic, and despondent; and, at times, such characters have thoughts of self-destruction.
