THE DISOBEDIENT MICE.

Old Mother Moutse left home one day, and told her children to stay at home until she returned.

Now these little mice, like some little girls and boys, thought that they would just run around for a little while, and that mother would not know it. Soon they spied a little box, and, peeping in, they saw a nice piece of cheese. "O! O!" said all the little mice; and in they ran, and began to nibble. They did not see Miss Pussy creeping up, so busy were they. One little mouse ran out, and—pop! Pussy had him. Away ran all the other little mice home.

Moral: Obey mamma. She knows what is best for you.

GOOD-NIGHT.

Tot, the little gray bird, as she is called, is a dear little girl of three. She is called "gray bird" because she wears little night-gowns of gray flannel. In the picture we can see her in one, all ready for bed. Her mamma has just brushed her short brown curls. This she does every night, and even that little Tot kneels at her mother's knee and says her prayers. As she is such a little girl she has never gone to Sunday-school yet, but she has learned about Jesus and his love.

LITTLE EDDIE'S QUESTION.

"Mamma, were all the disciples cross men?" was asked by a little boy five years old of his mother.

"No, Eddie," was the answer. "What makes you think they were?"

"Oh," said the little fellow, "I think they must have been cross men, because they wanted to send the little children away when they came to Jesus."

But Jesus would not let them send the children away.
