THE NEW WEST;
OR, CALIFORNIA IN 1867 AND '68.

By CHARLES L. BRACE,

Author of "Races of the Old World," "Home-Life in Germany," "Hungary in 1851," &c. 12mo. Cloth $1.75.

This work contains an account of what till lately has been a terra incognita to Americans themselves,—the Pacific Slope. Mr. Brace in his California journey has described what most travellers have omitted, the minute features of natural scenery and products, the different world of vegetation, and climate, and landscape which characterizes the Pacific coast. He has investigated closely the vine-growing regions, and the wine-making of California; its wonderful gardens and orchards, the new branch of silk-growing just beginning, and the remarkable agricultural capacities of the State. He pictures that wonder of the world, the YOSEMITE VALLEY, and the Giant Trees, and the Geysers.

Social Life, Schools, and Education are also treated, and several chapters are given to the Chinese in the State. Much practical advice is given to emigrants and farmers as to where to settle in California. Adventures among Robbers and Digger-Indians are the subjects of some of the chapters.

It is a work which all Americans who desire to understand their own country, should possess.
