From the Latin grace pronounced by President Hutton to the final echoes of the concluding anthem, the eighteenth annual dinner of the Engineering Society of the School of Practical Science at the Rossin House last night, was a success in the superlative degree. In broken, the big dining-room being "saturated" and a heavy precipitation passon 400 sat down to the excellent fare. The tables were beautifully decorated, and the banneret menu, with its class of youth and good spirits, and while the proceedings in a boiler factory or or only faintly suggest the clamor and recally faintly suggest the clamor and reverberation, the noise was good-natured Pieces, Gream and Sugar ncise and laden with cordiality. Lambton, Kent, Essex and part of Elgin. These had meant enormous sums, $80.000, $90.000 and $100,000, and upwards. He instanced a scheme for draining 500 acres of land, which cost $15.000 or $20 an acre, but the result $15,000, or $20 an acre, but the result was a piece of land unrivaled in fertility. Another instance of 8000 acres, which had been pronounced a failure, which had been pronounced a failure, was refashioned by the engineers more skilfully, with completely successful results. The combination of complicated engineering and complicated le-gal operations involved in these drainage works was worthy of the closes attention by students, and he assured them that work of this description would be tremendously increased. There was a dearth of men equal to work of this description, and young men, who would come down with enough executive ability, and backbone sufficient to familiarize themselves with the legal side of it, and would with the legal side of it, and would have the courage to charge what their services were worth, would find ample employment, and do a great service to the state. (Applause.) He need not say much to the rail-way engineers, for if he read the papers aright, even a first year S. P. S. man could run a street railway. (Laughter.)

J. Stiles proposed "The University," which was responded to by President Hutton and Rev. Bruce Macdonald. "The Faculty of Applied Science" was given by Mr. Munroe, and acknowledged by Prof. Galbraith. "Canadian Industries" were introduced by Johnson and responded to by J. W. Flavelle. "The Profession" was proposed by T. Hogg and spoken to by C. H. Prest. Hogg and spoken to by C. H. Rust, M. Haney and E. Burke.

speech, in which he satirized the newspapers. There was a great gulf fixed between 'varsity and the parliament buildings, he said, deeper than the literal ravine, which was only crossed when the university conferred LL.D. degrees. There was no connection between politics and political economy. One dealt with the wealth of nations and the other with the wealth of corporations. (Laughter.)

The quartet having sung "Drink to Me Only," and been encored, Hon. Mr. Hanna responded. He did not know Mr. Lang's politics, but if he was out the right side, then the legislature for him, and right away. What Engineers Can Do.

Mr. Hanna could not understand the scarcity of engineers in the western part of the province. Farm drainage had made a garden of the counties of Lambton, Kent, Essex and part of File Semi-Detach.

Without it no garden hath fragrance
Tho it holdeth the wide world's

The King of Denmark takes a keen but impartial interest in the politics of his country, and enjoys nothing so much as a friendly argument with the editors of the leading political organs, whom he invites to the castle for the purpose. He is, says "M. A. P." known as "the editors' terror." because he so frequently catches his visitors napping. The unsuspecting editor promptly lays down the political law, while the king listens attentively. The dissertation finished, his majesty turns to a book shelf, and taking down a large scrap-book proceeds to read the leaders of some previous issue of the editor's journal probably expressing diametrically opposite views.

In view of the possibility of pre-nature burial, an absolute test of death is greatly to be desired. The "Scientific American" gives a brief note of what professes to be an infall-ible criterion. It is a German invention and consists in the injection of fluorescine deeply into the tissues. If cir culation exists, the skin and mucou membrane turn yellow, and the eyes become an emerald green. If death has really taken place this does not happen. The injection should be made
