SPORTING MATTERS.

The Horse Races at Woodstock on Monday Attracted a Large Crowd.

AQUATIC.

Death of Noted English Oarsman. A London, England, cable of July 5 says: Higgins, the oarsman, is dead. John Higgins of London was the English champion sculler from October 8, 1877, until February 17, 1879, when he was defeated by William Elliott of Newcastle, whom he had previously defeated in June, 1878. Higgins was one of the London professional crew that visited Philadelphia on the occasion of the Centennial regatta, the others being W. Spencer, H. Thomas, and T. Green. They won on a bad foul on the part of the St. John crew, which could not otherwise have lost the race, as the Englishmen's rudders were broken. Higgins was at that time the best of the Thames scullers, but did not try for the title until May 27, when he was defeated by R. W. Boyd, whom he subsequently defeated twice.
