WILL SIR THOMAS SUCCEED IN CAPTURING AMERICA'S CUP WITH THE NEW SHAMROCK?

The Shamrock III. The designer, Charles E. Nicholson, in a brief speech, said he had done his best and that it was now for the sailors to do theirs. Traces of nervousness were discernible in Mr. Nicholson and were easy to understand. Alone he is pitted against three of the best designers of America—one of them a genius—and if the new Shamrock "lifts the cup" her victory will place Mr. Nicholson at the top of his profession. Like her predecessors, the new Shamrock is painted a vivid green above the waterline, with a white foot topping and the experts—the crowd seemed to be made up of experts—declared that she not only looked like a fast vessel, but was even a pretty one.

As the British battle ships in the harbor were firing a salute in honor of the Queen's birthday the Shamrock IV, Sir Thomas Lipton's challenger for the America's Cup, was launched at Gosport, England, and christened by the Countess of Shaftesbury. British and American flags and the flag of the Royal Ulster Yacht Club, under which colors the challenger will sail, gayly decorated the little shipping town, the yellow ground and big green shamrock of the yacht club predominating. Most of the inhabitants of Gosport believed that the war ships' salute was fired in honor of the Shamrock IV, and thence the shore to catch a first glimpse of the remarkable lines of the craft to which Sir Thomas pins his hopes of "lifting" the famous cup.

Later Hyer challenged Perry, the English champion, but his offer was not accepted, and Hyer retired, while his old enemy, Morrissey, became the champion. 1907—Sam Langford knocked out Jeff Thorne in 3rd round at London. 1913—Mike Gibbons defeated Joe White in 12 rounds at Boston.

WILL PLAY BALL.
 Rev. Geo. Hittus, who will be remembered as having played with the Marathons a few years ago is in the city and will be seen playing with one of the local teams against Woodstock. Mr. Hittus is still playing a very fast game and has played with different college teams, and only last year his team won the City League championship of Brooklyn, N. Y.

 King George V. will begin his fiftieth year today, and in the celebrations of the monarch's birthday throughout the British empire the friends of boxing will take an enthusiastic part, for they look to the King as the patron and preserver of the "manly art." Since George came to the throne there have been several crusades against boxing in England, and that they have all failed is due in no small part to the attitude of the British monarch. Early this year the British Association for the Suppression of Everything We Don't Like—an organization which has several flourishing branches in this country—got busy with the hammer and started in to administer a knockout blow to the boxing game. The crusade went along merrily, but as soon as it assumed influential proportions the King manifested his disapproval of the crusade by attending a boxing show, at which professionals as well as amateur boxers displayed their prowess with the gloves. That put the kibosh on the anti-boxing propaganda, and nothing has since been heard of it. King George shares the opinion of his father, the late King Edward, who declared that he would not give the snap of his fingers for "a lad who couldn't put his hands up."

Since the days of Fig, who became the first pugilistic champion of England nearly two centuries ago, boxers have enjoyed the approval of all English kings. George I. issued a royal command to Fig to appear before him and was greatly pleased with the exhibition. The second George's reign was marked pugilistically by the rise of such great boxers as Taylor,

VANITIE DEFEATED RESOLUTE

Rye, N. Y., June 2.—Heeled under a stiff northwest breeze until even her bronzed underbody glistened in the late afternoon sun like burnished gold, Alexander S. Cochrane's Vanitie flashed across the line a winner over the Resolute by sixteen minutes forty-eight seconds in the first race for the America's cup defence candidates yachts on Long Island Sound today. Although the official time allowance given the Resolute by the Vanitie is known only to the cup committee, it is estimated that the Resolute is in receipt of approximately three one-half minutes time allowance, so that the approximate corrected time advantage of the winner over the loser was close to thirteen minutes thirteen seconds. Yachting experts are not inclined to concede a repetition of this victory of the Gardner designed sloop over the Herschhoff creation, for the twenty-nine mile race over a triangular course was sailed under extremely fluky conditions and the adherents of the flag officers yacht are confident that tomorrow's race will be another story.

 King George, 49 today, is a Patron of Boxing.

Broughton and Slack, and the king on several occasions occupied the royal box at Broughton's amphitheatre. The reign of George III. was the palmy period of British boxing, when Mendoza, Jackson, Belcher, Pearce and Cribb, among others, were in the limelight. In 1814 the King gave a boxing exhibition in honor of the visit of the rulers of Russia and Prussia, and three monarchs and many princes and nobles witnessed the contests. Belcher and a number of other boxers were guards of honor at the coronation of George IV. During Queen Victoria's reign boxing received a black eye, but the game was saved by the Chambers and Queensberry rules, and the Prince of Wales, afterward King Edward, aided in, so far as was in his power, to save boxing from the Victorian opposition.
