the one to occupy a bedroom done in gray and burnt orange, with a lamp and a rug of old blue. The draperies and chair covers of orange and gray striped linen with tiny East Indian figures, the bed covered in the gray with a pillow of the striped linen and candlesticks of gray painted wood with pale blue shades would be a most unusual and pretty place for a room with a northern exposure.

One of the prettiest porch arrangements I have seen in many a season had for its main furnishings nothing more than a drop leaf kitchen table and four chairs with split hickory backs and seats. The initial outlay of money for this set was very small, and the final achievements was a marvel of artistic decoration. The table was painted a deep golden yellow with lines around the edge of apple green, and massive. The chairs were yellow and their round knobs were soft green. On the back of each was a round, flat cushion of black velvet bound in mauve woolen tape, stenciled in the three colors, and attached to the chair by an amusing fat tasseled green shaded yarn. The same set fit in a larger pattern had been applied to the grass rug. The whole plan did not call for any wonderful amount of talent, yet the result was delightful in its originality.

Nearly all new houses and apartments now boast their little breakfast alcove, and many old houses are having room made in the kitchen for them. In the present day situation regarding the maid question, they are a boon. Some of them are quite pretentious, but the simpler ones have a stationary table, on each side of which are two built-in benches. If it is possible to include a window in the plan, it is of course that much the better.

A happy guest indeed would be nicer of a spring morning.
