UPCOMIN'

Life as it once was

What was life like 530 million years ago? You can find out in a lecture on the Burgess Shale on Tuesday, Oct. 16.

Desmond Collins, head of the department of invertebrate paleontology at the Royal Ontario Museum, will give a talk on the Burgess Shale, which holds mysteries of the evolutionary process. The lecture is free of charge, and the public is welcome to attend.

Entitled Seeing "Wonderful Life": Field Work on the Burgess Shale in the Canadian Rockies, the lecture will be held at 4 p.m. in Room 146 of the Loring Bailey Hall on the University of New Brunswick campus in Fredericton. It is sponsored by UNB's geology department.

Burgess Shale is a small limestone quarry found near the town of Field, B.C. The shale dates back to the so-called Cambrian explosion - a time of rapid evolution marking a pivotal point in the history of life. The rock recalls an ancient sea that nurtured more varieties of life than can be found in all of our modern oceans.

A second lecture, aimed at students at the graduate level, will be held in the evening. Faculty and students are encouraged to attend this lecture, entitled Challenge of Burgess Shale Fossils: Contingency or Classification? It will be held at 8 p.m. in the University Club on the top floor of the Old Arts Building.

The Nurses Christian Fellowship group will be meeting every other Monday starting October 15th, 1990 from 12:30 - 1:30 p.m. in Room 08 MacLaggan Hall
