QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS. Miscellaneous.

CORN FOR HUSKING—EMMER.

Have a piece of new land to break up. I want to pasture it as long as I can, and then put in corn. Could you please tell me the best variety to plant that would make the best corn in cob, and also the best stalks for feed, as I intend to cut it up for winter feed?

2. What is emmer? A recent issue of "The Farmer's Advocate" recommended sowing it, as it produced 60 bushels to the acre. I inquired at principal seed stores in London, and they knew nothing of it. P. T. C.

Ans.—1. White Cap Yellow Dent, Compton's Early, Longfellow or King Phillip should give satisfactory results.

2. Emmer (Triticum dicoccum) is one of the seven distinct types of wheat recognized by botanists. It should be distinguished from spelt (Triticum spelta), which is not nearly so valuable.

A certain amount of emmer has been grown in Canada, however, under the mistaken name of spelt. Emmer is grown in Russia, Germany, Switzerland, Spain, France, Italy, and to a slight extent in some other countries. For the past seven years it has been grown experimentally at the Ontario Agricultural College, where it has made a good showing in comparison with barley as a grain for stock feed, producing very heavy yields of grain. From Guelph, it has been more or less widely distributed throughout Ontario for co-operative experiments, and, writing of it in 1903, Prof. Zavitz said the average yields thus obtained were higher than the average yields of the best varieties of barley.

Since then, it has been mentioned favorably a number of times in "The Farmer's Advocate." The grain of emmer is tightly enclosed within the chaff, from which only a small portion is separated in threshing. For feeding purposes, the grain and surrounding chaff are usually ground together in the same manner as oats are ground into meal. The average percentage of hull of emmer is only about three-quarters as great as the average percentage of hull in oats. Feed of emmer may be procured from farmers who are growing it here and there, and the wholesale seedhouse is behind the times which does not keep it in stock.

ALFALFA ON CLAY.

1. Having read with interest your article in issue of May 2nd, "Don't Let the Crust Form," would like to ask, through your valuable columns, if anything could be done to a field of 12 acres to be sowed to lucerne without a nurse crop, as some of the land is stiff clay.

2. Can we get a crop this season, if conditions are favorable, to be seeded at the rate of 20 lbs. per acre? G. P.

Ans.—1. It is rather risky business trying to break the crust on a field after it has been seeded with alfalfa, clover or grass. If a rain came within a few days after the seed were sown, something might be done, as soon as the ground dried up, with light harrows, or a weeder, but if the seeds had sprouted, great care should be taken not to disturb them. Perhaps the safest plan when seeding such a field is to have the surface harrowed, then, if a rain comes, and a crust forms, after it has dried off fairly well on top, run over it a roller with a small diameter. This will crush and pulverize the lumps, leaving a slight dust mulch. A roller of small diameter is best for crushing clods, because it grinds them down, whereas a large roller merely presses them into the surface. In using the roller, remember that rolling a dry, crusted surface helps to form a dust mulch, which retains moisture in the soil below. Rolling a moist surface has the opposite effect. It compacts the soil, producing a condition under which the soil moisture is drawn (by capillary attraction) to the very surface, and there evaporated by sun and air.

2. It is unlikely that the first season's growth on clay land would warrant cutting for hay. It will be better for next year's crop to clip the growth when six or eight inches high, or, at any rate, before any weeds go to seed, and leave the clipping on the ground for a mulch. It is harder to get a catch of alfalfa on heavy clay than on lighter soil, but once secured, it lasts longer and does better, as a rule.
