THE SLAVE CHASERS.

FIERCE BLOODHOUNDS THAT WERE USED IN THE SOUTH.

When Not In Service They Were Chained, and Only Their Masters Could Feed or Touch Them-The Strain Probably Extinct Now.

It was recently reported that an official of another state was entertained on a visit to a convict camp by a man bunt with bloodhounds, the men being given an hour's start and plenty of time to. climb a tree. Such exhibitions are not rare on the South Carolina state farms where bloodhounds are kept. The same kind of animals are kept by the sheriffs of many counties in this state, and they always do well on such show occasions, but have never been known to run down a criminal.

"I very much doubt," said an old slave owner, "whether there is a genuine blood-hound in the south or one with the 'nose! of the old runaway slave catcher in the country. Any breed of dogs that run by scent can be trained from puppies to run man and man alone. Ordinary deer or foxhounds take to this quite naturally, and if crossed with a half or quarter fox and it crossed with a hair or quarter lox-terrier they become vicious and persist-ent in the chase. But these are not bloodhounds, nor should those now own-ed by the state or counties in South Carolina be so classed.

"The bloodhound in his perfection of 'nose' and his ferocity was the product of the institution of slavery. The finest strains came from Cuba, large, powerful beasts, tawny or black, with white points and so fierce that when not in service they were chained, and only their master they were chained, and only their master could feed them or touch them. If they escaped, they chased the first person they saw, and their desire was to eat his flesh.

"Many of the dogs were imported to the south by the men who made their They." the south by the men was made their living catching runaway slaves. They were crossed on the deerhound, and the product was a good man hunter, fierce enough, but not so dangerous as the Cuban. Several packs of such dogs were covered in this state and their presence in owned in this state, and their presence in a county kept many a slave at home who would have otherwise sought the shelter of the forest, where, unless followed by such hounds, he could live for years, paying weekly or monthly visits to the negro settlements. "The alleged bloodhounds of this day cannot run a man if the trail is over three hours old, if it goes in water or is crossed by other trails. The slave catchers' hounds, bred for their cold nose for more than a century, could 'carry a trail' 36 hours cld. The common definition that used to be given for the name of this species of dog was that if a drop of blood fell on the track he would never leave it. They were like wolves, in that they hunt ed for meat and were eager to devour man run to a tree or cornered. There are many authentic stories showing their remarkable qualities of scent and sagac-It was practically impossible to baffle an old dog, and when his nose was once put by his master in the footprints of a man the particular seent of that person was the only one he would entertain in his nostrils, and that track he would pick out of 100. Ordinary hounds of chase are puzzled when the quarry takes to a running stream and goes up or down. The man hunter, acute and wise as a man, would systematically hunt the banks up and down for miles until the trail was recovered. "There is a case of particular note of record in this state where the services of professional slave catcher were called n to catch a murderer. The crime had been committed more than 24 hours when the boss of the pack arrived with his dogs upon the scene of the murder. One footprint was found retreating from the spot, and into this the muzzi from the spot, and into this the muzzle of the prize trailer of the pack was pressed, and she was given the word to go, the other dogs being held in reserve.

"Miles through swamps, across ponds of water and into the woods the dog trailed, finally coming out on a cultivated plants."

finally coming out on a cultivated planta-tion, her nose close to the ground and occasionally giving utterance to the fierce but musical long drawn 'bau' that carried terror always to the hearts of the runaway. Into the street of the negro village went the dog, carrying the trai where it had been crossed by dozens of men, women and children, and then into a house. Here she made a circle of the room, came out of the same door, trailed to another house, scratched at the barred door and when it was opened caught the murderer under the bed. He belonged to another plantation and had come there for shelter and protection and had used every device to throw off pursuit. "It was, of course, important and nec-essary that the owner of such a pack of dogs should be responsible and vigilant. He had to be a fine horseman and ride horses that could go almost anywhere, for he must be up to the leading dog when the slave was brought to bay.

the fugitive was too hard pressed to climb a tree, or, as they sometimes did, attempted to shoot the dogs, he would be torn to pieces if the master was not promptly on hand. Laws governing the abuse of slaves were strict and enforced. The most noted case of their violation is one of the best known criminal cases in our law books, although it occurred years ago. A captured slave had incurred the enmity of the hunters, and he was killed and his flesh fed to the dogs. The two whites implicated were tried, con-victed and hanged at Walterboro, the militia of Charleston being marched 60 miles to prevent their rescue by friends on the day of execution. "With the passing of slavery the necessity for cold nosed man chasers no longer exists and the breed, at least in this part of the country, is no longer preserved."

Fate of the Confederate Seal, "The result of the last Confederate council of war held at Abbeville, S. council of war held at Abbeville, S. C., in May, 1865, was soon known allower Abbeville, and the generals and the secretary of war were kept busy for hours signing honorable discharges for the tired soldiers, who immediately applied for them," writes Mrs. Thaddeus Horton, in The Ladies' Home Journal, "During the evening Mr. Benjamin asked for a hatchet, and with it he defaced the Confederate seal. About 12 o'clock the Confederate seal. About 12 o'clock the same night the Confederate party continued its retreat in the direction of Washington, Ga., and while crossing the Savannah river in the darkness some one suggested that the seal be thrown overheard. board. This idea was at once approved, and when the boat reached midstream it was dropped with a dull splash into the eandy river bed of that beautiful southmus watercourse, where to this day, its ston all fulfilled, it serenely rests."

A CRABAPPLE PIPE.

Not of the Wood, but of the Fruit It-

"Did you ever hear of a crabapple pipe?" said a New Orleans man who is an ardent lover of Lady Nicotine and who possesses a collection of smoker's tools that runs all the way from a black "cuddy" of Fingal to a huge porcelain furnace that has seen service at Heidelberg. "Yes, I mean exactly what I say," he continued, "a crabapple pipe! You never heard of such a thing? Well, no more did I until I paid a visit to an old uncle of mine who has a farm on the Mississic of the river a little above souri side of the river a little above

"The old man is a great smoker him-

"The old man is a great smoker himself, and while he doesn't put on any particular style he is about as good a judge of the weed as you would care to run across. His favorite mixture is a combination of light golden leaf with just enough plug cut to give it a body, and the pipe he likes best is an old fashioned clay bowl on a long reed stem.

"On the afternoon of my arrival he took me out to the extreme end of his farm to show me some fancy stock, and while climbing over a fence the bowl of his sipe came off, and, of course, hit the only stone in the whole field and was broken into a thousand pieces. I was distressed, because I knew how much my uncle enjoyed his smoke, and suggested that we return to the house for a new bowl. 'Oh, that isn't necessary,' he replied. 'I'll fix up one in a minute right here.'

"Several early crabapple trees were standing near by, heavily laden with fruit. To my amazement the old man pulled down a limb, selected an extra pulled down a limb, selected an extra-large, perfectly sound apple and pro-ceeded to scoop out the core with his knife, leaving a cup shaped cavity in the top. Then he pushed the reed stem through the side, cleaned it out with a straw, loaded the machine from his tobacco pouch and in a moment more was puffing away as happy as a king.

"The apple was of the yellow variety, hard and about the size of a large egg plum. It was very juicy; but, strange to say, that had no apparent effect on the burning of the tobacco, nor did it, as far as I was able to discover, impart any peculiar taste to the smoke. My unch laughed heartily at my surprise and as sured me that crabapple pies were frequently indulged in by all old timers in the Missouri valley region. I tried one myself that night and found it tiptop."

THE POINT OF VIEW.

Things Appear Differently to Differ ent Eyes.

One of the essential things for one that would influence others is the ability to see things as they look to those whom he addresses. A lack of this ability has been responsible for the failure of many persons who would otherwise have been successful as teachers, missionaries, lawyers before juries and even orators and statesmen. Striking illustrations of the different Striking illustrations of the different aspects things wear in the eyes of different people are consently coming to light. A party of American travelers, journeying leisurely up the Nile, expressed a desire to celebrate Washington's birthday in some appropriate manner. Growth of French Jacobin Clubs. A Jacobin club was established at Mareilles before the end of 1789, and within the first six months of 1790 one was organized in each of the large towns. But it was after the national federation, July 14, 1790, that Jacoba influence spread most rapidly.

Then branch societies began to be organized all over France, and as an aid to this the club at Paris in the autumn of 1790 founded the Journal des Amis de la Constitution, of which Laclos became editor. The journal spread Jacobin opinions and increased rapidly the organization of clubs. Before the end of the year Legis was able to publish the year Laclos was able to publish a list of over 120 provincial clubs. By 1791 there were nearly 40° in July of the next year this number had increased to 1,200, and when the republic was established excellent authority estimates the number of affiliated clubs at 26,000, the number of affiliated clubs at 26,000, one for every commune in France.

Very soon these clubs became centers of the advanced revolutionary feeling. The young radicals of the provincial towns flocked to them, and through them they controlled local solitics. In Paris, Lyons, Alx and Bonteaux there were two clubs. One was composed of the more respectable and the other of the lower elements of society. The latter was always a branch of the former and in times of urgent need supplied it with rioters.
