They followed the track he pointed out and ultimately came to a stile. On the other side was a heap of half-hardened mud, scraped from the road. On the surface of the heap, where it had been smoothed by the shovel, was distinctly imprinted the form of a man's hand, the buttons of his waistcoat, and his watch chain, showing that he had stumbled in hurrying over the stile, and fallen there. The pattern of the chain proved the man to have been Manston. They followed on until they reached a ford crossed by stepping-stones—on the farther bank were the same footmarks that had shown themselves beside the stile. The whole of this course had been in the direction of Budmouth. On they went, the next clue was furnished by a sheppherd. He said that wherever a clear space three or four yards wide ran in a line through a flock of sheep lying about a ewe-lease, it was a proof that somebody had passed there not more than half an hour earlier. At 12 o'clock that day he had noticed such a feature inhisflock. Nothing more could be heard of him and they got into Budmouth. The steam-packet to the Channel Islands was to start at 11 last night, and they at once concluded that his hope was to get to France by the way of Jersey and St. Malo—his only chance, all the railway stations being watched.

Whilst the attention of the Inters was directed to the mails, down East street came a man as boldly as possible. The gait was Manston's, but not the clothes. During this narration, Edward, lost in thought, had let his eyes follow a shabby man in a smock-frock, but wearing light boots—who was stalking down the street under a bundle of straw which overhung and concealed his head. It was a very ordinary circumstance for a man with a bundle of straw on his shoulders and overhanging his head to go down the High street of Troominster. Edward saw him cross the bridge which divided the town from the country, place his shaggy encumbrance by the side of the road, and leave it there. here. A smash; a rude shock. One of them told the following in a city church lately when he was invited to speak: A traveler discovered a man lying on the ground one warm day within a foot or two of the shade of the tree. "Why don't you lie in the shade?" he inquired. "I did," replied the man, "thut it has moved away from me and I can't afford to follow it." J. B. Ford & Cc., the operators of the largest plate glass plant in the world, commenced drilling for salt in Wyandotte some time ago. The object of the company was that if salt in large quantities was found that chemical works would be established for the manufacture of soda ash and other ingsedients used in the manufacture of plate glass. The other day the drill penetrated through a strata of salt 48 feet in thickness, and another lies below at a depth of about 1,200 feet of a thickness of more than 10 feet. This is eminently satisfactory to the promoters of the concern in Wyandotte, and it is expected that more than $1,000,000 will be invested. This is as great a supply of salt as has ever been found in Michigan.

Fishing through the ice is a booming winter industry at Bay City. A village has sprung up on the ice at the mouth of the Saginaw River. It is a gathering of hute, sheltering from one to six people each. When a fisherman arrives at the village with his hut, which is on runners, he preempts a claim and proceeds to business. First he cuts a hole in the ice near the middle of his shanty and, after throwing in a quantity of bait to attract the fish, he sits upon a box or barrel and patiently awaits a victim. The fish are speared or hooked, and sometimes with a rapidity that soon fills the little hut. There are about 100 of these fish shanties on the bay, and upwards of 300 men and boys hard at work.
