The proposal by the Countess of Aberdeen for commemorating the diaof several fine carloads west today at mond jubilee of the Queen by founding 17c and 17½c for white north and the Victorian Order of Nurses is taking practical form. At a largely attended conference in Ottawa on Thursday the honorary secretary briefly outlined the needs particularly of Manitoba and the Northwest Territories, and said that an order of Victorian nurses could give the physicians there valuable aid, and would give needed help where doctors could not be obtained. The existing training hospitals could be used, and cottage homes for the residences of the nurses in the country could also be used as emergency hospitals. By co-operating with existing hospitals at five or six centers, and by the founding of six or eight cottage homes for nurses, subordinate and tributary to the hospitals of each of these training centers, the whole of Manitoba and the Northwest Territories could be covered. The nurses would then be able to reach their patients without loss of time or much expense. Each of these cottage homes would cost about $1,000. These homes might be named after those who gave $1,000 each. The wealthy donors who would give larger sums might have their names commemorated in the training hospitals.

A BETTING EXPERIMENT.

Every Man Who Lays a Wager on

Horse Should Read This. The thought of getting money without work is so generally attractive, and betting on a horse-race seems such | 459 days, yielding 6669 pounds of milk; an easy way of accomplishing it, that thousands of readers study the morning papers for "tips" on races-in other words, for advice as to the best horse on which to bet.

The New York morning dailies devote more attention to this feature and spend more money in the effort to get other American city, for there are more race-tracks near New York, and presumably, more of those people who recklessly part with their money. These papers employ reporters who spend nearly all their race-tracks or in the company of grooms, jockeys, trainers and horse wrers. These reporters know the pedigree of every horse "on the turf." They keep, from year to year, books of careful memoranda, in which is recorded the performance of each animal; and from this wide experience and this store of information they compile their "tips," or advice to bettors

The New York Evening Sun, at the opening of the racing season last spring, began a systematic study of "tips," with a view of finding out how much they were to be relied upon. The plan adopted was this: A series of tables were made, one for each of the eight morning papers which printed "tips." In each table were set down every day the names of the horses selected by the corresponding paper as "probable winners" in that day's races. Every evening, when the races were finished, an entry was made on each table of the gain or loss a reader would have sustained if he had bet fifteen doffars on each horse advocated by the paper which that table represented. These tables were accurately kept for three months. When the racing seasor ended and the sheets were balanced, an interesting discovery came

It is not nece any to name here the papers from which the "tips" were taken. They may be called The Star,

The Evening Sun found that if a reader had bet fifteen dellars every ish troops now at Constantinople, except the Sultan's body guard, and that advocated by The Star, he would have lost nine hundred and thirty-three dolthe event of a revolt at Constantic dred and fifty-one collars: by The nople. A New Dairy Breed. Jersey, Guernsey and Holstein breeders, as well as the Ayrshire, Brown Swiss and Simmenthaler people, will have to look to their laurels, for a new dairy light appears in the east, this time in the form of the buffalo of India. The India buffalo, it will be understood, is the genuine article, and not the American bison to which we tion Journal, these animals, while not rivaling other dairy breeds in milk production, greatly surpasses them in ter-making capacity and in the total solids which the milk contains dairy experts of India declare their buffalo is the best butter-producing animal in the world.
