The Conservative Picnic. Our Conservative friends held a piclions, but lingered in front of the monkey cage. It is not possible to explain this interest in Gamey on any ground but sensationalism. It would be a pitiable reflection on public intelligence and public morality if this curiosity was inspired in the remotest degree by admiration or approval of the man and his methods. For thinking and honorable Conservatives, the member for Manitoulin must have been the death's head at the feast. His unrebuked presence on the same platform as Mr. Whitney indicates that the Opposition has determined to carry him, or rather that he cannot be shaken off. He has some secret and sinister hold which enables him to defy the better elements in his done to reduce the dog population party. It was significant that Mr. Borwas absent. He had been advertised as the chief figure in the event, and his presence was supposed to give the sigfor the Dominion elections. His re- sleep. leave Ottawa for one day, when in the House, suggests that he refused to identify himself with Gameyism.

Kingsmill's Remnant Sale

URING the great sale we naturally made many remnants, These must be cleared out before new goods arrive. The prices will be cut so you can procure ends of all classes of goods at half price. These remnants are made up of some of our latest importations. The stuff is right; there is nothing wrong with them, only they are broken lengths, and the price is cut in half. We realize the fact that no matter how low the price is, it is high if there is no quality back of it. Come to look or to buy, as you please-equally welcome if you only drop in to see what we are doing.

School days are again approaching; the little ones will need new clothes. This great REMNANT SALE affords an opportunity of procuring good quality goods at less than the prices of the inferior. The making costs the same, why not have the best? The important point with intending purchasers is how to get the best for the money, and for this reason we advise early selections, as those who come first will of course have the choicest pickings. Don't delay, attend early.
