CHRISTMAS STAMP CAMPAIGN

THE 1909 BATTLE AGAINST THE DREAD WHITE PLAGUE.

Available Bids in the Muskoka Free Hospital for Consumptives Increased Three-Fold as a Result of Last Year's Sale of Christmas Stamps. The Number Can Be Doubled This Year If Everyone Will Help.

STIMULATED by the success of a campaign for the sale of the Christmas Stamp of 1908, the Muskoka Free Hospital for Consumptives has decided to issue a similar stamp for 1909.

The stamp of 1908 was a beautiful thing, and the sale of it was a success. The design was in red and green, and of a size suitable for the regular government postage stamp.

This Christmas stamp will not carry any kind of mail, but any kind of mail will carry it--and carry too the happy Season's Greetings from sender to receiver. The stamps will be done up in envelopes of ten, twenty-five, fifty and one hundred for ordinary selling, and large users will be supplied in quantities. The price for ten or for one thousand is a cent each.

The banks, departmental stores, drug stores, book and stationery stores and many other stores will sell them. Women's clubs, church organizations, public schools, and many other organizations and individuals will help this year as last year.

There would seem to be no reason why everybody everywhere may not help in forming an army of willing workers to sell these stamps all over the Dominion. The Muskoka Free Hospital for Consumptives is in the caring for patients from every province in Canada.

The first issue of the stamp for this year is one million, and these will be put into circulation immediately, but there can hardly be any reason why the issue should not be increased many times over before Christmas.

The direction of the sale of Christmas Stamps is in the hands of Mr. J. M. Robertson, Sec.-Treasurer, National Sanitarium Association, 367 King Street, West, Toronto, who will give prompt reply to any enquiries regarding the stamp.

THE CLASH OF CIRCUMSTANCES.

"Then I say you need never come beneath this roof again."

"I had never hoped to see you, but a man must follow as his conscience leads."

Elise Dubert faced Elise's defiance and he read contempt in a face that once had looked upon him with a warmer light. With her tall, straight figure and imperious attitude she showed her family's characteristics of pride and determination as her face bore its traits of firm mouth and chin. He turned to leave.

"At least I owe myself a word of explanation," he said quietly at the door. "When I accepted the hospitality of your father and your cousin it was with none but friendly intent. I was a stranger. I knew nothing of California. I can never forget the obligations they placed me under."

I have formed political convictions and in so doing have found that I can no longer be associated with them. It seems small, treacherous, even, I suppose, I cannot justify myself to you for they are of your own blood. Still, you must know that it has cost me something in sacrificing the hope I had. For I did hope, Elise."

"She stood looking at him with proud eyes, unsmiling, a white, erect figure. Her air was that of one who awakes the withdrawal of an intruder. He held out a hand to her, then dropped it and stepped quickly out upon the porch, thence to the street."

Joseph Elise was the subject under discussion in the study of the Dubert home a week later.

"There may be some difficulty in making him fight," said John Dubert slowly, looking out across the wheat field. "It would be quite like him to overlook a challenge and carry it off with his superior air." The speaker was a square, heavily muscled man of middle life, with a close cropped beard and mustache that did not hide a thin, hard mouth. His eyes were narrowed as he debated, half to himself, and took nothing from the aggressive quality of his face. Opposite him sat the only other occupant of the room a man about sixty years old, white and lined. His features showed the same marks that were somewhat veiled in the younger. There was a strong resemblance between them.

"You seem to have a poor opinion of gold to me."

in the country. Even had the nerve to come to me with it; there's sheet iron creek for you."

"This was what the note bore: In justice to myself I denounce Joseph Elise as a prevaricator, base, calumniating scoundrel, paltry and coward."

John Dubert. "Let me be the bearer of your answer Joe," said Crawford, tensely. "In this thing with you to the end. I'd give something myself to have the change at the black visaged rascal myself."

"Well," exclaimed the editor, impatiently. "Elise stood up and faced him."

"Crawford," he said, heavily, "you haven't known me long and I can't complain to you judge me as you would any other man of your acquaintance in my place. But for myself I know it is no cowardice when I say that I would give ten years of my life if this had not happened."

The other watched his face keenly, nodding in quick comprehension and sympathy.

"You don't say another word. It's the girl I understand, old man. Do you see any way out of it? You can count on me!"

Elise shook his head with a long sigh.

"No; there's no way out of it. If he had met me in person, insulted me even so much, I might have passed the thing off. I thought I had done with this miserable code of so-called honor that binds us in all our actions. It is false, Crawford, and that comes from a man who has lived by it."

"Shall I act for you then?"

"Yes; you know the procedure. I give you full power to make the arrangements. Accede to anything; he will have a fight, and it makes not the slightest difference to me how he gets it."

It was not the custom in the Dubert family to admit its women to the sterner purposes of the men. The first intimation of the state of affairs came to Elise when she read the papers next morning. She started up as the paragraph came under her eye, her instant impulse being to seek her cousin. She knew what this meant. From beyond the studio door she could hear the voice of John Dubert and her father. But with her hand on the knob she drew back.

It was useless. What could she say? The man was an enemy to her house and to her. She hated him. There was that strike that she must lead against the wall for support.

"She fought against the decision. No; she had not thought of Elise. It was the danger her cousin must run that set the blood flowing about her heart. She returned to the porch and set herself to watch."

The first visitor was Jim Hammond, long her hopeless admirer, a henchman of the Duberts. He greeted her awkwardly on his way in. She confronted him when he returned, hat on hour later.

"When is it to be Jim?" she asked calmly.

"Tomorrow," he answered, embarrassed, but helpless against her peremptory tone. She put a hand on his arm.

"Come," she said, drawing him toward the parlor. "I want to speak with you a moment. Inside and shut the door and faced him."

"Jim-Hammond, you have vowed and protested often enough to me. I have never asked anything of you. I'm going to ask it now. The young man's face flushed and he stepped forward eagerly.

"Try me, Elise. I'll do anything I can for you and you know it. You are going to act as John's second?"

She swept across the parlor to the table on which Hiram Dubert's box of duelling pistols lay. The weapons were oiled and polished by her father himself each week and had served in many an encounter involving members of the family.

"Then here are the pistols they will use," she handed out. "I want you not the caliber? He looked at her blankly."

"Listen," she said. "This man Elise is a professional duelist. My cousin's hot head is carrying him to certain death. The honor of the Duberts is as dear to me as to him, Jim, but I will not have him slaughtered. I am trusting in you. You'll lead."

More bread and Better bread

—And the Reason for it

A STRONG FLOUR can only be made from strong wheat. Of course this special process is more expensive to operate but it means a lot to Purify Flour users—that's why we use it.

It means that Purify Flour is made entirely of the highest-grade flour parts of the strongest wheat in the world.

It means a high-class, strong flour and therefore yields "more bread and better bread."

Purify may cost a little more than some flours, but results prove it the cheapest and most economical after all.
