The Home Circle.

AN AGREABLE INFLECTION IN LAW. A TRUE STORY FOR BOYS.

In a prominent Stockton family is a young man who graduated from one of California's leading universities. That young man wanted a position. He desired to take up railroad work and to enter the clerical department of one of the large companies. His parents were intimately acquainted with an ex-Congressman, formerly of Stockton, but now a resident elsewhere. Thinking that the former Congressman's influence might be of some avail in securing a situation for their son, on a recent visit of the former legislator to this city they broached the matter to him.

"The ex-Congressman at once promised so use his influence and stated to the parents that he felt quite certain of being able to secure a position for the young man. The gentleman then visited San Francisco, and going to the office of a high official of the Southern Pacific company, with whom he was well acquainted, he told the railroad man that he would like to secure a good position for a young man with whose family he was quite intimate.

"The young man is a university graduate, and a bright young fellow," was the way the ex-Congressman recommended the young Stocktonian.

"Why, certainly," replied the railroad official. "The Southern Pacific company always has room for bright capable young men. Send him to me."

"We thought you said it was all fixed," they said. "But our boy went down to see Mr. B. and he hasn't gone to work yet."

"What," exclaimed the ex-Congressman, "then something must be wrong. I'll see about it."

Good Neighbors All

(Charles Moreau Harger, in the "Outlook.")

"Why did you come back?" I asked a Westerner who returned to a prairie town after two years in New York. It seemed incomprehensible that he should leave the excitement of lower Broadway for the monotony of the broad plains.

"Neighbors!" was his response. "Would you want to spend your life where the people twenty feet away do not know your name or care whether you live or die? We were brought up with neighbors—and when the baby died and not a person in the blessed town came near us, when we went alone to the cemetery, it was too much. We packed up and started for home—what's the use of living that way?"

Does neighborliness exist, like our old geometry problems, in inverse ratio to the square of the distance? Perhaps. One day last summer, away out in the western Kansas wheat lands, where distances are magnificent and the perceptibility of population to the square mile is expressed in decimal fractions, a settler became ill. He had fifty acres of fine wheat already turning yellow in the sun. He had no hired man, nor had he the means to engage harvesters. He had counted on changing work with some one and thus getting his grain to market. Day after day he tossed in pain and worried over the prospect. Neighbors? The nearest was three miles away, and the whole township had but seven families.

One morning three self-sufficers with full complement of helpers came rattling over the prairie. The drivers did not ask for permission, but went boldly into the field. Round and round the machines hurried, reaping the ripe grain and leaving shocks of gold dappling the level lands. The sick man heard the buzz of the reapers and tried to get to the window—but his wife told him what was happening, and he fell into a deep, sweet sleep.

It is no slight thing to give up a day in the midst of pressing harvest that a farmer miles away may save his crop, but it is a pretty good sort of sentiment that prompts the action. It may be that it will count for something sometime.

Would the average city street show an act such as marked a far frontier community: in which I spent a night recently? asked the former New Yorker, then went on: "We had stopped at a little town of less than a dozen houses, and spent the evening listening to pioneer stories in the dingy office of the only hotel. As we were preparing to go to bed, in came three men carrying a violin, banjo and a guitar. They were ranchers from the Pawnee Valley, and had been out twenty miles on the plains to relieve the evening for an old friend who was sick and nearly blind with no one to read to him and no music except that of the ceaseless winds. They did not realize that they had done much—they simply did what they could without thinking. The leader of the trio started in the west a poor boy. Now he owns 2500 acres stocked with horses and with registered cattle so good that they take prizes at every royal stock show in Kansas City. Yet he found time to go twenty miles to cheer up an old friend in misfortune. Why shouldn't we be proper? Why not, indeed?"

Some instances have even more of human interest, as newspaper men express it. One day a woman out on the plains followed to the wind-swept cemetery the husband with whom she had plowed through long, weary years. She returned to her little home and gathered around her the five children, heart sick and disheartened. She had but one horse; the other had been sold to secure money during the husband's illness. It was time for ploughing the corn ground. How could she hire men to do the work? She cried herself to sleep that night. Early the next morning her oldest daughter awoke her with, "Look, mother, see who's coming!"
