

	PAGE
CHAPTER XVIII.
Social condition of Goldsmith—his colloquial contests with Johnson.—Anecdotes and illustrations,	219
CHAPTER XIX.
Social resorts.—The shilling whist club.—A practical joke.—The Wednesday club.—The "fun of man."—The pig butcher.—Tom King.—Hugh Kelly.—Glover and his characteristics,	221
CHAPTER XX.
The Great Cham of literature and the King.—Scene at Sir Joshua Reynolds's—Goldsmith accused of jealousy.—Negotiations with Garrick.—The author and the actor—their correspondence,	222
CHAPTER XXI.
More hack authorship.—Tom Davies and the Roman History.—Canonbury Castle.—Political authorship.—Pecuniary temptation.—Death of Newbery the elder,	224
CHAPTER XXII.
Theatrical manoeuvring.—The comedy of "False Delicacy."—First performance of "The Good-natured Man."—Conduct of Johnson.—Conduct of the author.—Intermeddling of the press,	225
CHAPTER XXIII.
Burning the candle at both ends.—Fine apartments.—Fine furniture.—Fine clothes.—Fine acquaintances.—Shoemaker's holiday and jolly pigeon associates.—Peter Barlow, Glover, and the Hampstead hoax.—Poor friends among great acquaintances,	226
CHAPTER XXIV.
Reduced again to book-building.—Rural retreat at Shoemaker's Paradise.—Death of Henry Goldsmith—tributes to his memory in the Deserted Village,	227
CHAPTER XXV.
Dinner at Bickerstaff's.—Hiffeman and his impetuosity.—Kenrick's epigram.—Johnson's consolation.—Goldsmith's toilet.—The bloom-colored coat.—New acquaintances.—The Hornecks.—A touch of poetry and passion.—The Jessamy Bride,	228
CHAPTER XXVI.
Goldsmith in the Temple.—Judge Day and Grattan.—Labor and dissipation.—Publication of the Roman History.—Opinions of it.—History of Animated Nature.—Temple rookery.—Anecdotes of a spider,	230
CHAPTER XXVII.
Honors at the Royal Academy.—Letter to his brother Maurice.—Family fortunes.—Jane Contarine and the miniature.—Portraits and engravings.—School associations.—Johnson and Goldsmith in Westminster Abbey,	232
CHAPTER XXVIII.
Publication of the Deserted Village—notes and illustrations of it,	234
CHAPTER XXIX.
The poet among the ladies—description of his person and manners.—Expedition to Paris with the Horneck family.—The traveller of twenty and the traveller of forty.—Hickey, the special attorney.—An unlucky explosion,

CHAPTER XXX.

Death of Goldsmith's mother.—Biography of Parnell.—Agreement with Davies for the history of Rome.—Life of Bolingbroke.—The haunch of venison, CHAPTER XXXI.

Dinner at the Royal Academy.—The Rowley controversy.—Horace Walpole's conduct to Chatterton.—Johnson at Redcliffe Church.—Goldsmith's History of England.—Davies's criticism.—Letter to Bennet Langton, CHAPTER XXXII.

Marriage of Little Comedy.—Goldsmith at Barton.—Practical jokes at the expense of his toilet.—Amusements at Barton.—Aquatic misadventure,

CHAPTER XXXIII.

Dinner at General Oglethorpe's.—Anecdotes of the general.—Dispute about duelling.—Ghost stories,

CHAPTER XXXIV.

Mr. Joseph Cradock.—An author's confidings.—An amannensis.—Life at Edgeware.—Goldsmith conjuring.—George Colman.—The Fantoccini, CHAPTER XXXV.

Broken health.—Dissipation and debts.—The Irish Widow.—Practical jokes.—Scrub.—A misquoted pun.—Malagrida.—Goldsmith proved to be a fool.—Distressed ballad-singers.—The poet at Ranelagh, CHAPTER XXXVI.

Invitation to Christmas.—The spring-velvet coat.—The haymaking wig.—The mischances of loo.—The fair culprit.—A dance with the Jessamy Bride,

CHAPTER XXXVII.

Theatrical delays.—Negotiations with Colman.—Letter to Garrick.—Croaking of the manager.—Naming of the play.—She Stoops to Conquer.—Foote's Primitive Puppet Show, Piety on Patterns.—First performance of the comedy.—Agitation of the author.—Success.—Colman squibbed out of town,

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

A newspaper attack.—The Evans affray.—Johnson's comment,

CHAPTER XXXIX.

Boswell in Holy-Week.—Dinner at Oglethorpe's.—Dinner at Paoli's.—The policy of truth.—Goldsmith affects independence of royalty.—Paoli's compliment.—Johnson's eulogium on the fiddle.—Question about suicide.—Boswell's subserviency,

CHAPTER XL.

Changes in the Literary Club.—Johnson's objection to Garrick.—Election of Boswell, CHAPTER XLI.

Dinner at Dilly's.—Conversations on natural history.—Intermeddling of Boswell.—Dispute