FRIDAY MORNING, JULY 20,

An Unselfish War.

Today the first 857,000 men of the United States ten million draft are called up for selection. The intention is to get from a quarter to half a million into uniform as soon as possible. The selections in the first place, are made by ballot and the tribunals that decide upon the fitness of the drafted men are believed to be of an impartial and reliable character. Almost everything turns upon this, and great efforts have been made by the United States authorities, as should be the case in Canada, to arrive at this result.

It is much more of a debatable point in the United States than it is in Canada whether the republic has any direct interest in the war. It ought to be considered by our Canadian pacifists, slackers, war obstructionists, and all of a like mind, that it is the glory of the United States that the republic is not going into the war on its own account, but in the general interests of humanity. Most of the Canadian objectors and obstructionists altogether repudiate the idea of Canada having any interest in the war, and they have not the vision to see that Canada's unselfish service would be far nobler than an interested participation in the war. Canada cannot profess, however, that her service is quite so disinterested as that of the United States. We are intimately associated with the destiny of the British Empire, and unquestionably Germany regards Britain as her chief foe. If Britain were to be conquered, Canada would be part of the ransom, without a doubt, which the victor would exact. Those who object to fight in the war are either careless of who rules them, or confident of the success of British arms, and willing to accept this vital gift from hands that they flout. It is a somewhat mean-spirited attitude in either case.

Are You for Canada or for Germany?

There is much gain in having one definite issue decided, and the statement that the conscription bill, as it is popularly called, will be passed at once, clears the air. There are still a large number of people who think that the conscription bill is merely a political move; that it is not necessary; that the government will not proceed with it, or if they pass it, it will not enforce it.

This is as much as to say there are still crowds of people in Canada who do not yet, after three years, appreciate the fact that the greatest war of the world is going on, with men dying in millions, and the fate of humanity at stake.

There was a story of a Japanese girl in the papers a few days ago who did not know there was a war going on. It is no reproach to be ignorant, but it is a deadly reproach to oneself to want to be ignorant, to refuse to see or hear or know.

There are many, however, who have excused themselves by declaring that Canada's participation in the war is just a matter of politics and party tactics, akin to waving the flag, and that the introduction of the conscription bill was for political effect and not meant seriously. The passing of the bill and the summoning of the first three classes will be, to all such people, the first intimation which they cannot ignore, that the war must be taken seriously, that the war must be taken seriously, that the war must be taken seriously.

At last there is a clear and definite issue before the country—something definite, sides to be taken, minds to be made up. The United States, which has only been about as many months at war as we are years, has already got ahead of us in calling upon the first selective draft today. Canada might have led the democracy of the continent in this matter, but we have made a good beginning with our splendid volunteers, and must show a united front and support those who now represent us overseas, as the other democracies are doing.

High Prices and Control.

It cannot be said that any appreciable results have been attained yet thru the efforts of the several controllers. A great deal of information has been acquired and some of it divulged, but the government has had to pay $9.50 for its coal this week.

an advance of $2 on last week, and like and other necessities are as high as ever. Even the revelations about the cold-storage conditions have made no difference in the price of bacon.

We are being admonished to be thrifty, eat less and waste nothing. The advice, with prices as they are, appears to be superfluous. Thrift has been the watchword in every household for months past, with comparatively few exceptions. There is more waste in connection with the cold-storage plants, if the tales be true, than with all the households in the country. High prices are an automatic inducement to thrift and discouragement to waste, which even a food controller cannot hope to rival.

High prices are also an inducement to the producer and the farmer sows with a more lavish hand and plants as he never did before, with famine prices in his market reports to stimulate him.

Perhaps the controllers do not like to interfere with these things, and are therefore content to admonish us upon our waste and our gluttony, instead of making any attempt to save our pockets.

With regard to fuel, we are much to blame here in Toronto for our own difficulties. Five hundred cars of coal are said to be lying waiting to be unloaded here now, and may lie for thirty days. This is a radical evil for the embargo on coal to Toronto is due to the delay in returning cars to the United States railways which have shipped them here. There is a great dearth all over the continent of rolling stock, and when coal merchants make storehouses of cars for a month at a time, it is not remarkable that the owner companies take drastic steps to correct the evil.

Russia and the German Traitors.

Those who are still nervous about Russia, should read some authoritative book of travel or description of the Russian people. Their methods are different from ours and their standards do not always coincide with ours. But they are eminently human, and a very lovable race. Their thirst for knowledge, their intelligence, their remarkable linguistic capacity, and their qualities make us rather dull by comparison in some respects. Yet the Russians are a people and conquering people, and loyal to their friends, "slow to anger, and of great mercy." It is true that their wrath is terrible, but the wrath of any man with any moral force is not a light or easy thing to deal with.

The Russians will keep faith with their allies. It was to do so that Nicholas was hurled from his throne. Evidence exists that he had planned a separate peace with Germany, which would have been consummated but for the revolution. He was married to a cousin of the Kaiser, and, like King Constantine, could not resist the influence.

The little insurrections and countless revolutions that have marred the harmony of the Russian republic are all the work of German agitators, emissaries and spies. Lenin, who was supposed to be an anarcho patriot, turns out to be a German agent, and has taken flight. It is almost invariably the case that where intelligence hostile to the success of the entente allies in the war are found, they are to be traced to German sources.

CITY HOLDS CARS MUCH TOO LONG

Coal Merchants' Secretary Replies to Denial of Property Commissioner.

That the city officials are "scratching at the surface of the trouble" in their movements to clear the coal situation in Toronto was the assertion of Secretary H. A. Harrington of the local section of the Retail Merchants' Association, last night.

The secretary reiterated his contention that the city itself is one of the chief offenders in failing to expedite the release of coal cars when he saw an interview attributed to Property Commissioner Chisholm published in an afternoon paper denying the charge. He suggested as a result of that interview that the property commissioner examine the correspondence between Commissioner Harrington's office and the Grand Trunk Railway officials and then see the four cars standing at Queen and De Grassi streets where they have been held for the last eight or ten days.

Secretary Harrington expressed the belief that the source of trouble lay in the minds of uninformed and misinformed persons who supposed that the retail coal dealers were responsible for holding up coal cars. The secretary cites the fact that there are not more than 20 per cent. of the coal cars which have belonged to the retail dealers.

He declared that his association and the Dominion Railway Board were cognizant of the full situation and realized that necessary steps must be taken to prevent a possible coal shortage in Toronto. He hinted that surprising events may be forthcoming soon. Brokers who are holding cars, he said, would be made the subject of action to compel their more prompt attention to regulations affecting this delaying of the badly needed cars.

REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

By ADELE GARRISON

What Madge Told Dicky

As I rushed from the living room of the Marvin house, after my defiance of my mother-in-law, I heard Dicky call out after me. But I did not answer him. I could not, and as I stumbled into the shelter of my own room I locked the door after me.

"That detestable old woman!" I muttered, forgetful, indeed not caring, in the heat of my anger, that I spoke of Dicky's mother. "I hate her! How I hate her!"

For ringing in my ears were the words with which she had concluded her tirade against Robert Gordon, the mysterious elderly millionaire, who had known my mother.

"Mr. Gordon is madly in love with Margaret," she said to Dicky, "and if you do not look out you will have a scandal on your hands. I am not insinuating anything, but I certainly think Margaret ought to be told an explanation of the untruth she told us at the supper table the night you introduced Mr. Gordon to us."

Underneath my anger there lay also the bitter consciousness that there was at least a trifle of justice in her unkind words. I had not told Dicky that it was only through his mother's espionage on me previous to the time when Dicky brought him to our table at the Sydenham, but I certainly had given both Dicky and his mother the impression that I never had seen Mr. Gordon before when my mother-in-law called my attention to his instant scrutiny of me from his vantage point of the next table to ours.

How I regretted that during our sojourn at the Cleggmore farmhouse in the Catskill mountains I had not told Dicky the whole truth concerning the queer actions of Mr. Gordon. I had had plenty of opportunity, but I had weakly let the explanation go by.

"Confession is good," Dicky's step came swiftly up the stairs; his knock sounded on my door. "Madge, let me in," he commanded, but the note of tenderness in his voice was the influence that hurried my fingers in the turning of the key. I opened the door and Mr. Gordon strode in, past me, closed and locked the door again, and turning, caught me in his arms.

"Don't you dare to cry!" he stormed, kissing my reddened eyelids. "Aren't you ever going to get used to mother's childish outbursts? You know she doesn't mean what she says in those tantrums of hers. She simply works herself up to a point where she's absolutely irresponsible, and she has very much trouble. The peanuts should be freshly roasted before using, as stale kernels will clog the grinder. Remove the shell and skin and grind in a meat chopper, moisten with a little olive oil, season with salt and mix to a paste. Pack in glass jars and keep tightly covered."

Some Peanut Recipes COOKING ECONOMIES

By ISOBEL BRANDS

We are so accustomed to "roasted peanuts" or "peanut candy" as tidbits that we sometimes forget that peanuts are actually a very substantial food.

From a nutritive standpoint alone we find that peanuts measure up higher in food value per pound than most meats and vegetables, and they have not increased in cost, comparatively speaking, since the war. Peanut butter is rich in fat and it is the same quantity is used as the quantity of ordinary butter for bread-spreads, cooking, etc., the cost will be less.

Here are some recipes for peanuts to be used either as the main dish or as a substantial part of a meal.

The liquid used can be either stock or juice from some boiled vegetable:

- Peanut Purée.
1 cupful of finely chopped peanuts.
1 cupful of stock.
1-4 teaspoonful salt.
1-4 teaspoonful onion juice.
The peanuts should be roasted, the shells removed and then cooked in the stock for ten minutes, and if desired a roux of butter and flour can be made and added to thicken the soup.

- Peas and Cheese Soup.
1 cupful of finely chopped peanuts.
1 cupful of grated cheese.
1 cupful of bread crumbs.
2 tablespoonfuls of finely chopped onions.
1 tablespoonful of butter.
1-2 lemon.
Salt, pepper.

- Cook the onion in the butter and add a little water. When tender, strain. Mix cheese, nuts and bread crumbs, add strained onion "juice," lemon juice and salt. Bake in a shallow, buttered baking dish, and place in oven until brown. This is a very substantial dish, containing two protein and needs as an accompaniment only some watery vegetable.

- Peanut Croquettes.
1 cupful of chopped peanuts.
1 cupful of toasted bread crumbs.
Cream sauce.
Mix the toasted bread crumbs and nuts and molasses with a cream sauce and butter thinned with milk. Shape into croquettes and fry in deep fat.

- Peanut butter can be bought at reasonable prices in jars, and as nut oils have a tendency to become rancid unless covered very tightly, it is better to buy the medium-sized jars which will be consumed quickly, so that a fresh supply is bought often than the very large jars, which may save a little in price, but which are likely to become spoiled if kept too long.

However, it is possible to make your own peanut butter at home without to explode or burst. You wouldn't like to see a perfectly good mother-in-law strewn in fragments all over the room, and as lightly as Dicky could, he strained her temper, he added, with the quick transition from hot anger to whimsical good-nature that I always find so bewildering in him.

I struggled for composure. My mother-in-law's words had been too scathing, her insult too direct for me to look upon it as lightly as Dicky could, but the knowledge that he had come directly after me, and that he had no part in the resentment his mother showed me, it eased for me to control myself.

"I ought to remember that your mother is an old woman, and an inquisitor, and that she is not as angry at some of the unjust things she says," I returned, swallowing hard, "so we'll just forget all about it and never happen."

"You darling!" Dicky exclaimed, drawing me closer, and for a moment or two I rested in his arms, gathering courage for the confession I meant to make to him.

"Dicky, dear," I murmured at last, "there is something I want to tell you about my mother. She has been telling me that I ought to have told you before, but I kept putting it off."

Dicky held me off from him and looked at me quizzically. "Confession is good for the soul," he quoted, "so unbuckle your dreadful secret."

He drew me to an easy chair and sat at my side, and I told him all that I had ever seen Mr. Gordon do at that night at the Sydenham.

"Is that all?" he asked. "Why, I knew that the moment you spoke as you did that night, you were trying to tell me something. You were holding me in his arms as if I were a little child. 'Now for it,' he said, smiling tenderly at me."

"It isn't so very terrible," I smiled at him, reassured by his understanding. "It is only that without telling you a deliberate untruth I gave both you and your mother the impression that I had never seen Mr. Gordon before that night at the Sydenham."

"Is that all?" he asked. "Why, I knew that the moment you spoke as you did that night, you were trying to tell me something. You were holding me in his arms as if I were a little child. 'Now for it,' he said, smiling tenderly at me."

"You don't know all," I persisted, and then, without reservation I told him frankly the whole story of Mr. Gordon's spying upon me. Beginning with the hour in the Sydenham woman's parlor when I saw him, and the incidents at the tea room where Lillian and I lunched, and at the railroad station, down to the so-called wholesome man and his thence to the taxi driver to ascertain my identity. I omitted nothing.

Then, by the order-in-council which his quizzical look. He was frowning, not angrily, but as if puzzled. "Don't think I blame you one bit," he said slowly; "but it looks to me as if mother's dose might be right, as if the old guy is smitten with you after all."

very much trouble. The peanuts should be freshly roasted before using, as stale kernels will clog the grinder. Remove the shell and skin and grind in a meat chopper, moisten with a little olive oil, season with salt and mix to a paste. Pack in glass jars and keep tightly covered.

Food wholesome sandwiches can be made with peanut butter. Spread cream cheese or thick sour milk and spreading on thin slices of bread. Or made by mixing peanut butter with mayonnaise and spreading on slices of bread. The centre of the salad bowl, surrounding it with sliced cold boiled potatoes and garnishing with slices of hard-boiled egg.

TO DECIDE MONDAY ON CHAIRMAN OF BOARD

Representatives of Street Railway Union and Company Will Then Agree on Third Member.

Selection of one person from among the several names proposed for the position of the third arbitrator to decide the differences existing between the Toronto Street Railway Company and its 1,800 union employees will be made by D. A. Carey, the men's representative on the board, and Duncan MacDonald, of Montreal, the company's representative, Monday.

The two arbitrators held a conference yesterday afternoon, and both parties named for the consideration of the other. No more meetings will be held until Monday, when a choice will be made. In the meantime the two representatives are considering the names proposed. The men will form the board of conciliation of the union under the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act and hand down a judgment. Neither party is bound by the decision of the board. General Manager R. J. Fleming, of the company, has stated that the corporation, however, would abide by the decision of the arbitrators. The men, who were given a six-cent-an-hour increase as an inducement to call off their strike and return to work, are asking an additional raise to ten cents an hour and better working conditions.

SIDNEY S. McMURRAY DEAD.

A message was received by the relatives in the city announcing the death of Sidney S. McMurray, who passed away at his summer home in Muskoka early yesterday morning after an illness of nine days. Mr. McMurray, who made his home with his son, Thomas, at 81 Northcote avenue, was 59 years of age and had lived retired. He is survived by his wife and two sons, Thomas, 81 Northcote avenue, and John N. 528 Greenwood avenue. The funeral will be held tomorrow from his late residence, 230 p.m., with interment in the Prospect Cemetery.

CONFIDENT PRICES WILL BE REDUCED

Dominion Food Controller's Fish Committee Holds Initial Meeting.

CONTROL DISTRIBUTION

May Govern Price of Fish or Storage, Sale and Delivery.

That the price of fish to the consumer must and will be reduced as a result of the appointment of the Dominion food controller's fish committee, was the declaration of Food Controller W. J. Hanna, yesterday afternoon in a statement to the public following the initial meeting in his office of the members of that committee. The latter was unanimously elected chairman of the committee, F. S. Wiley and R. Y. Bacon. The latter was unanimously elected chairman of the committee, F. S. Wiley and R. Y. Bacon.

Food Controller Hanna, after the discussion held by himself and the committee, issued a statement which revealed the extent of the authority and the measure of power invested in the members of the food controller's special fish committee. It also indicated that within a short time the consuming public in this and other parts of Canada will see a material reduction in the price of fish.

Question of Control.
The food controller said: "The question is being asked whether the fish committee will need to assume control of the actual distribution of fish. Such action may be necessary. It is hoped, however, that the interests concerned may adjust their methods to the requirements of the public."

The price to the consumer must and will be lowered.

"The fish committee is now assuming the proportion of the supply of fish which comes direct from the fishermen to the large retail distributor, and the proportion which goes from the fishermen to the so-called wholesale man and thence to the smaller retail dealers."

"I have visited in the members of the fish committee like powers to those vested in me by the order-in-council which appointed me food controller of Canada."

Powers Drastic.
The powers cited in the order-in-council and referred to by Controller Hanna are very comprehensive and drastic if the food controller or his appointees should choose to exert them. For instance, the fish committee may govern the price of fish or storage, distribution, sale and delivery thereof, or the committee, if it desires, may purchase, or requisition store, sell and deliver fish."

It is the intention of the fish committee to keep the public informed of its work. Through official statements, the committee will be issued whenever there is real information to make public.

FATHER CLAIMS DAUGHTER.

Thru the counsel at Osgoode Hall yesterday, Reuben Tuttle, of Campbellville, claimed the custody of his nine-year-old daughter, Gladys Clarke, who is at the present time in the possession of her mother, May Worthington Tuttle, now in Toronto. T. R. Ferguson, K.C., acting for the mother, wanted leave to call his clients to give their testimony as he said he thought the court should hear the evidence of the mother and daughter. This application, however, was refused, and affidavits must be filed by Tuesday next, when the case will be heard further.

MUST NOT OFFICIATE.

Before Mr. Justice Sutherland at Osgoode Hall yesterday on the motion of A. T. Warren, of Bishop's Mills, for an order restraining R. C. Horner, who was deposed by a vote of the general synod of the Holiness Movement Church at Ottawa, from further exercising the functions of a bishop, the justice ruled that he must no longer officiate until the trial had disposed of the question whether he was validly deposed. A suggestion that the church should be called to deal with the matter was rejected.

Jewish Garment Workers.

Editor World: A certain Toronto weekly publication which has diligently achieved an unenviable reputation in its career for vilification and baseless sensationalism of the lurid kind recently came out with a mail-order and hysterical attack on the Ladies' Garment Workers' Union of this city.

The charge is made "that the immigrant Jewish workers who constitute a majority of the Garment Workers' Union, have unfairly monopolized and gained control of the garment-making industry; that by their exclusive tactics, they have been able to tyrannize over and force the native-born Gentile workers out;" "that the existence of the union itself is prejudicial to the welfare of those desirous of making an honest living at the trade;" "It will be heaven help the women of Canada if they have to join the union and the Gentile woman is down-trodden, harassed and discriminated against." These are quotations from the article that will illustrate its immoderate tone and insidious intent.

In order to avoid any unwarranted misunderstanding and consequent distrust that might result from the calumnious efforts of that paper, we permit us, sir, to make a declaration of the true situation.

A few instances will prove that a more candid disregard of the facts than is contained in the above would be difficult to imagine. In June two hundred Jewish workers went out on strike to protest against the intolerable treatment accorded to 27 Gentile women workers, and were successful in their efforts. Last week 60 Jewish workers prepared to strike to help four Gentile cutters secure better terms. The insincerity of that journal's attack is best evidenced by its own records. In an issue of February 24, 1915, it comments on the action of 1000 Jewish garment workers who had gone on strike to support the demand of 60 Canadian women for improved conditions, as follows: "The Jewish cutters are to be congratulated on the stand they have taken in this question. In order to protect 60 Gentile operators who were in imminent danger of losing their positions, they stood behind and stand behind them today. Would any organizations of Gentile workers do as much for the Jews?"

That the charge of discrimination is equally unfounded is evident from the fact that the union has at great expense succeeded in organizing ninety-five per cent. of the Toronto cutters, among whose number there are few Jews, into a local of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union. The Gentile women garment workers have been organized into a separate English-speaking branch in order to make things as congenial as possible for them.

All this is quoted, not in a spirit of complacent self-satisfaction, but with a desire to show that the Jewish workers have co-operated with their Gentile comrades fairly and squarely.

The assertion of that paper that the average wage in the trade is $40.00 is a gross exaggeration. Except for designers (who are artists and are paid on a basis of scarcity value), the average is nearer $18.00 per week—it being only a season trade.

With reference to the adaptability of the returned soldier to the work of garment making, we cannot emphasize strongly enough how welcome he would be. It must be borne in mind that garment making is a skilled trade and an arduous one, but if returned soldiers were trained for the work we would welcome them gladly, and feel that their presence in our ranks would compel some employers to abandon their hitherto contemptuous attitude towards the immigrant composition of the trade.

the union and would enlist the active sympathy of the public.

To anyone not susceptible to the medieval cry of "hep-hep," it is evident that the whole attack was a transparent and deliberate attempt to confuse issues and stir up racial antagonism. Fortunately, the coarse and parochial attitude of that journal towards the immigrant is not widely prevalent among the thinking public.
