On Parliament Hill

By TOM KING

The shouting and the tumult dies. The long struggle over the second reading of the conscription bill is ended. The captains, or, rather, the parliamentary colonels, have not departed; they will remain here with nothing between them and harm but the ocean, until after the session, or, possibly, until after the general election. The light of the property of the prop long struggle over the second reading of the conscription bill is ended. The eral election. The kings-for we have a few kings of finance in parliamentstood not upon the order of their going. The strains of the recessional had hardly died away before they were entrained for the big commercial centers. Sir Rodolphe Forget was probably in Montreal in time for the opening of the stock market. His brother knight, the richest ket. His brother knight, the richest man in parliament, returned without delay to Toronto.

The second reading carried by more than a two to one majority, the vote standing: Yeas 118, Nays 55. Forty-five of the 55 members voting against conscription dame from the Province of Quebec Outside of Quebec only ten voted against the second reading of the bill. They were Messrs. Chisholm, Copp, Hughes (Kings, P.E.I.), Kyte, Michaud, Party lines were almost obliterated in the Quebec delegation. Even Sir Rodolphe Forget voted against the government. Last spring Sir Rodolphe lined up a lot of Quebec Conservatives against the bi-lingual resolution, and it was expected that he could hold a number of them in line for conscription. He labored hard, and it is said that cabinet portfolios were offered to Mr. Mondou and Mr. Boulay, but the tide of sentiment was flowing too swiftly for even so astute a manipulator as the knight of Montmorency and Charlevoix. Like King Canute of old, he ordered the tide to retire. It retired for a moment, but came back with such fury that Sir Rodolphe was overwhelmed. Like that famous character in one of the novels of Dumas, he could well say of his Nationalist disciples:

I am their leader; therefore, I follow them.

It surprised some that more western Liberals who voted for conscription did not first of all vote for the referendum. Some outspoken conscriptionists saw in this course no inconsistency or danger, as the referendum was bound to be defeated, and the bill itself was bound to carry by a large majority. Levi tion. The west, however, is so absorbed in its desire to win the war that few members from that section of the country dared to falter or compromise. Of the 57 members from the west only two voted against the second reading of the colscription bill. They were: Hon. Frank Oliver and Dr. Molloy, of Provencher.

The vote against conscription by provinces outside of Quebec shows that six votes came from the Maritime Provinces, two from Ontario, and two from the west. The two Ontario members were: Hon. Charles Murphy (Russell), and Edmond Proulx (Prescott), in whose ridings the French vote is predominant. It is to be noted that Messrs. Pugsley, Carroll and McKenzie would have been added to the list of Maritime Province members who voted against conscription had they not been "paired" with Messrs. Carrick, Tremaine and Stewart (Lunenburg), respectively.

The story of the long night of voting

Then Mr. Speaker put the question, the division bells rang and the chamber and galleries filled as by magic. No less than 175 members crowded into the chamber. Some were men of national prominence not seen in the house for years, but brought here by the government whips to swell the majority for conscription. There were also present officers serving overseas who had hurried back to Canada, more needed for the moment in parliament than they were in the trenches. Col. Barney Hepburn of Prince Edward County, receiv-

The first vote was on the six months' hoist, and was soon disposed of. Only nine members stood up to be counted in the affirmative. They were all Nationalists from Quebec, but Nationalists elected in 1911 to support the Borden government. Hon. E. L. Patenaude, who but a day or two ago, was our postmaster-general, led the ten "wilful men" from Quebec.

tenaude and his band as the "Noble Ten":

However that may be, the two party leaders who had journeyed together thru the first division parted company when the first division parted company when the house voted on the next amendment which asked that the bill be for further proceeded with until submitted to and approved by the elecorate of Canada. Sir Wilfrid, of course, rose to vote for his own amendment, and was heartily cheered. For a time he seemed to be holding his forces well together, but then half of his Ontario battallon deserted, and his western legion utterly stampeded. Some Ontario Liberals who voted for conscription paid Sir Wilfrid the compliment of standing by the referendum, but only Levi Thomson of Qu'Appelle, and W. E. Knowles of Moose Jew, among the western Liberals, made this concession. The bolt on the referendum included the following nine-teen Liberal members of parliament, viz.: Messis. Buchanan, Carvell, Champagne, Charlton, Clark (Red Deer), Cruise, Douglas, Graham, Guthrie, Loggie, Maclean (Hallfax), MacNutt, McCraney, Sunbury), Nesbitt, Neely, Pardee, Ross, Turriff.

The announcement that the Laurier amendment proposing referendum had been defeated by a vote of 111 to $2, was greeted with loud applause from the government benches. The members by this time had been caged up for an hour, as during the taking of the vote no one is allowed to enter or leave the chamber. They were showing unmistakeable signs of fatigue, and the daylight was already shining thru the high windows of the chamber. With a sigh of relief they settled themselves for the final roll call and the last vote.

Then up rose from the ranks of the opposition, Mr. Copp, who was returned a year or two ago at a by-election to succeed the late Hon. Henry R. Emmerson as the member for Westmoreland. He announced that he desired to speak on the main question, as he had an undoubted legal right to do. But why did he renew a threadbare discussion at four o'clock in the morning?

At first the house listened patiently, because sometimes there is a good reason for so singular a procedure. Thus, Mr. Thoburn, Conservative member for Lanark, was once put up to make a speech between divisions at two o'clock in the morning. The house had just voted down the Borden sub-amendment on the second reading of the Laurier Naval Bill. The main amendment, moved by Hon. F. D. Monk, was next to be voted on. Certain Conservative members like Hon, (now Sir) George Foster, refused to follow Mr. (now Sir) Robert Borden in voting for a Nationalist amendment, and Mr. Thoburn's speech gave the man opportunity to quietly tiptoe out of the chamber.

It soon became evident, however, that Mr. Copp's speech was obstruction pure and simple, and there was almost a riot. Amid derisive howis, boos, and jeers he persisted. Then it developed that he was going to offer an amendment. This amendment, finnally submitted to the Speaker; of raising money by public subscription for their support.

There was a general exodus from the chamber before Mr. Copp finished his speech, which in the end was more or less of a harangue against the patriotic fund. The members, however, rushed back en masse when Sir Robert Borden rose to reply, and government supporters loudly cheered the prime minister's denunciation of Mr. Copp, his dilatory amendment, and the motives that inspired it.

Sir Robert can well be defended for slowing irritation, but his speech roused to ire Hon. Frank Oliver, and altho it was after four o'clock in the morning the latter came back with an impassioned reply. He made a prety good defence of the amendment, too, and qualled not at all before the storm of protest and denunciation his speech aroused. Nearly every kind of insult imaginable was shouted across the chamber, and for a time the house was in a state of disorder approaching the closing hours in the naval aid debate, when Hon. Dr. Sprowle, then Speaker of the house, and Dr. Clark, of Red Deer, now the idol of the Conservative party, locked horns in furious controversy.

But the storm ceased when the placid Sir Herbert Ames rose to reply, and before long a vote was taken on the Copp amendment. It was beaten even worse than the Laurier amendment, Levi Thomson, of Qu'Appelle, and Mr. Krowles, of Moose Jaw, voting with the

Then in broad daylight came the vote on the second reading of the bill, and the government won out by 63 majority. There was a great cheer, followed by the singing of the national anthem, in which all the members with one exception joined. That exception was the pugnacious Mr. Oliver, who has a record on the singing question that he wants to keep consistent.

Meanwhile a number of members, including Mr. Sexsmith, of E. Peterboro, were joined by their wives, who had sat patiently thru the long dreary debate and endless roli calls. In the main corridor looking tired and disappointed was Pierre Guilbault, the Nationalist member for Joliette, who had been wheeled into the chamber in an invalid's chair to cast his vote against conscription. He was one of the men who did most to defeat the Laurier government in 1911. He smiled wearily as Sir Robert Borden, surrounded by an admiring entourage, went by. Then his gaze rested for a moment uppon the tall gentleman in a long overcoat, looking none the worse for sitting up all night, who was making his way briskly to a waiting car at the main door of the parliament building. It was Sir Wilfrid Laurier, smiling just a little to himself, but apparently undismayed.

The Clan Maclean did noble. The clan has four representatives in the house of commons, and all of them voted for conscription and against every amendment. From east to west, they are: A. K. Maclean (Liberal), Halifax; A. A. McLean (Conservative), Queens, P.E.I.; Gen. Hugh H. McLean (Liberal), Queens and Sunbury, and W. F. Maclean (Conservative) South York.

amendment, finnally submitted to the Speaker:

Moved that the further consideration of this bill be deferred until such adequate provision has been made for the dependents of soldiers enlisted for overseas as will remove the necessity of raising money by public subscription for their support.

Then, at a long last, the weary members hastened from the foul air of the chamber to the sunshine, the fresh morning air, and the innocent birds, unconscious of conscription chirping among the trees. Sir Robert Borden's face beamed with satisfaction as he took the elevator to his office in the parliament building.

"We had a bigger majority every tine," he remarked to Barney Hepburn; and the latter replied:

The whips made money on every heat.
