BEATTY'S VISIT TO THE STATES

The Independent Believes It Has Great Significance.

Warmer Friendship—Its Relation to Japan and the Anglo-Japanese Alliance, and the Affairs of the Far East.

(The Independent.)

About the visit of Earl Beatty to the United States there is a significance which, perhaps, may not be fully appreciated without explanation. Earl Beatty has not come here merely as the Lord of the Admiralty, but as the Lord of the Admiralty in London, a sailor still at duty, who speaks for the British Navy and there speaks for the British government, when addressing the Pilgrims' Dinner at the Washington Conference.

Always at the Pilgrims' Dinner, Earl Beatty is thicker than water. There are, of course, important, commonplace things, as such, may be taken for granted. But at the banquet to Earl Beatty, he is ceremonial, as were he orations, with particular exactitude. He is entirely an oversight that Japan is ignored. The Japanese nation was not present at the conference, and no Japanese were present. In the speeches, stress was laid upon the position between the American and British fleets in the North Sea and the Pacific Ocean, especially the latter, but no mention was made of the naval patrol maintained during the war by Japan. We had the story of the Manila Bay, where British helped American ships, and we had the story of the Japanese fleet, which was a word. Most startling of all was Earl Beatty's blunt declaration that in the North Sea the American squadron was under his command. He made no attempt to soften or mitigate the challenging character of the statement. He said, "The Japanese fleet is not only as the truth, but it is a complete arrangement under the circumstances. Whatever rivalries there may have been between the United States and Great Britain, they are now a thing of the past. It is abundantly evident that a complete and affectionate understanding has been established between the officers on the quarterdeck."

The Pilgrims' banquet does not stand alone. The vote of the Congressional Medal to the United States and the award of the Victoria Cross to the American Unknown have afforded another of several occasions on which the solidarity of the United States and Great Britain has been emphasized. From President Harding, there have been messages which could only mean a change for the better in Anglo-American relations. It is, perhaps, not too much to say that an entente, always implicit in community of language and culture, is coming to a fact. It is not an alliance! It has not been and will not be put into words. But it will be more actual fact than the necessity arises. It is not a bond that need be submitted either to Congress or to Parliament, but it is a bond that is being woven into the assumptions which are woven into the relations of the two nations. Over questions like the Panama canal or the tariff there may be friction and difference of view, but not over essentials must be included. Far Eastern interests, and the entire world will be put to the test, forced to it by the policy of Japan and the status of the Anglo-Japanese Treaty. The fact is that while Japan has a strong hand, she has rather overplayed it. Seeing the Old World shattered, and the New World, and demanded great concessions. At what a cost President Wilson might have held for some time, but he was not tempted. The incident did not appear at once to affect the Anglo-Japanese alliance, but it meant none the less that the alliance was doomed. As a momentary safeguard, Australia and New Zealand might cling to it, but only at conditions acceptable to the United States, while Canada, as she showed by her famous ultimatum to the British Imperial Conference, would have none of it.

The position of Japan might have been worse if she had been wise enough at once to withdraw her claim of sovereignty over Yap and to agree to its internationalization, as desired by America, instead of long haggling over the matter. Meanwhile, such as she fortified her attitude with ever-increasing armaments, both on land and sea. For this she could not even make the excuse that she was defending China from Western exploitation and aggression, while her own conduct in China and Korea puts the attempt of Japan to forestall the Conference by a separate negotiation with France, may not be calculated to inspire confidence in the good purposes of her naval preparations.

The alliance between Great Britain, Japan, and as first signed nearly twenty years ago, was never intended as a mantle under which Japan was to proceed with impunity to exclude the rest of the world from large areas of the Pacific. It was to be a guarantee to be maintained by the suzerain against any challenge in years to come.

SAY FRANCE NOT WISE IF LONE POLICY CHOSEN

London, Nov. 24.—Marquis Curzon, secretary of state for foreign affairs, said today that if France pursued an isolated and individual policy she would not in the long run injure Germany and she would fail to protect herself.

Rudyard Kipling says it is in the interest of Britain and France to remain united to face Germany, their common enemy.

Such a use of the alliance menaces India, Australia, and New Zealand more immediately than it menaces Canada and the United States. The moment that Japan reduced the reasons for the alliance to one single fear of what would be intolerable. Even more out of the question was an alliance that would involve Great Britain on the side of Japan, as against America, in naval competition for the control of the Pacific. The fact that Japan was building up her land forces by conscription, as well as her naval navy, did not tend to reassure Great Britain as to her ultimate object.

After the conclusions forced on Britain by her Dominions in the Imperial Conference, Japan should not rest under any illusions as to the choice she has to make, or as to the validity of the Anglo-Japanese alliance if she is determined to pursue the course of excessive armament. If she decides to close the door to the west of her, she must be prepared to sacrifice the benefits of her understanding with England. Japan has much more to gain by association with the military despotisms, that today govern the destinies of mankind. Dwellings on Japan's alternatives and the Japanese situation, there is a cheering significance in Lord Beatty's measured words and pondered assurance of comradeship.

BRIDGE ACROSS DETROIT RIVER

Will Have Two Decks and Cost $28,000,000—Will be of Suspension Type.

Lansing, Mich., Nov. 23.—Construction of an international bridge between Detroit and Windsor is now believed to be certain as the result of the Public Utilities Commission's order, authorizing the American Transit Company, incorporated in Nevada, to do business in Michigan and to sell $1,000,000 of stock.

This company had previously obtained authority by special act of congress to construct a bridge across the Detroit River and its sister corporation, the Canadian Transit Company, has obtained similar authority through act of parliament. The bridge is to cross the river from a point near foot of West Grand Boulevard.

Thomas G. Baile, attorney for the American company, announced after proceedings to obtain land for a Detroit approach to the bridge will be commenced this winter. It is planned to commence actual construction work in the spring.

The bridge will be of the suspension type, the decks being supported from cables of nickel steel wire. The central span will be the longest single-span bridge in the world. The bridge will actually have two decks, one for railroad and one for foot traffic, vehicular traffic and street cars. The decks for street traffic will be constructed first, the bridge with this deck costing $15,000,000. The railroad deck, to be built later, will bring total cost to $28,000,000.
