SEEKING A SOLUTION

Men's Delegates in Conference Give Formal Notice of Strike, but it Cannot Be Effective Before March

(Canadian Press)

Birmingham, Eng., Jan. 18.—The conference of delegates of the miners' federation has adjourned for a fortnight after a national meeting of work at the coal mines in Great Britain. The end of February, however, is the first date on which the notice can become effective.

The conference decided to accompany the notice that the men were going to quit work with an ultimatum to the employers that the men are ready to continue negotiations for a settlement. The conference has adjourned until February 1. At both sides appear to be heartily desirous of finding a way out of the deadlock, there is a general feeling that a national strike which would affect about 200,000 men will be averted.

Attell had Brown groggy and bleeding from the nose, and in a six-up in the tenth round. Brown forced the fighting throughout, but Attell's defense was impervious. All of Brown's best blows going for naught. Brown opened the fight with a light left which did not do much. Attell topped with the lead man, and there was not a heavy blow struck throughout the round. In the second round, Attell landed several uppercuts, without a return, and before the round ended, had closed one of Brown's eyes and badly damaged the other. In the third round, Brown continued his rushing tactics and Attell covered up and landed a short uppercut to Brown's chin. The fourth round was the most sensational of the bout. Brown swung hard at Attell and the latter stopped him with a straight left. Brown landed a hard left, sending Attell to the ropes. Just before the end of the round, Brown landed a left and right, and Attell appeared to be in bad shape, but at the bell the featherweight champion went jauntily to his corner. From this point on, Attell led at will and seemed able to land all the blows in his repertoire, sending home at least a dozen without a return.

A SALVAGE CLAIM AGAINST JENNIE C.

Schooner Was Since Dec. 29 Trying to Get to Boston From Tusket—A Rough Experience

Montserrat, Jan. 18.—The British schooner Jennie C, which arrived at this port on Dec. 29, in a waterlogged condition, after a trying experience on a passage from Tusket, N. S., bound for Boston, with lumber and which after making temporary repairs proceeded on her way. Jan. 18, she has been towed back and several days of more thrilling hardships have been endured. The schooner Jennie C and her cargo became liable to salvage to those who towed her into port and it is thought to be especially the case at the sailing time is approaching. The cost of towing and repairs had been effected that the schooner would be a general ship-ship of the team. The schooner was captured by the British navy on the night of Jan. 5, and when a few miles outside of Liberty Island, the vessel began to leak and the cargo became damaged. The vessel was being towed by the tugboat, and it took several hours to get her into port. In the harbor, where he found it unsafe to remain but a short time on account of the condition of the sea and the constant increase of water in the hold of the vessel. Orders were given to slip the anchor and the vessel was beached. In the meantime the schooner's only boat had been stove and the vessel's rudder carried away. The vessel was towed to the shore, where the cargo was salvaged. The schooner's captain let go his cargo and the vessel was towed to the shore. For three days and three nights the captain and his crew, consisting of three whites and a colored man from Bermuda, accompanied by his daughter, hovered together in the vessel's cabin, with the temperature more than twenty degrees below zero, drifting about the bay wherever the ice was fit to take them, and all the time the ship's flag in the rigging, blowing for assistance.
