RING SICKNESS. - This is not dissimilar stroyed. Britain and America have differed so widely in their views on political economy, that it is almost presumption on small intellects, to put forth their opinions in such important matters of state, which require a phorough study, and well trained educated minds to discuss. While professing certain predifficultions, we desire to act fairly, and for the public good, and here may add, that the present Dominion Government have without cavil, shewn that they desire to prosperity of the country, beyond any political position or power. While admitting that personally we are not indelted to their ability and management. Were
