CANADA AND THE MONROE DOCTRINE.

A Minnesota paper advises Canada not to establish a fleet of her own or to contribute to the Imperial navy.

This the Minneanolis journal holds to be unnecessary force of 50,000 men ready to take the field. because there is a Monroe Doctrine by virtue of which the United States would protect the whole of this conmen would spring to her defence. But that would have aggressor. But Canadians happen to know that the only times their country was attacked since it became wholly British, the enemy came from the immediate south. This patronizing way of advising Canadians to trust to the United States for succor in time of trial is getting out of fashion among up to date politicians and journalists of the Republic. They are beginning to see that it is stupid when not meant seriously and offensive when it is earnest. It places Canada in the position of a world with which Canada is more anxious to be on terms of good comradeship, and there is no country in the world which Canada would less desire as a protection and guardian. Rather than accept any such relation ship, expressed or implied, Canada would welcome are nexation, with the responsibility and control that full and equal partnership would give.

There may have been English poets of the last century who are better known than Tennyson to those who speak other languages. There are no others so familiar to English speaking people. A generation has come upsince his work was done, and yet Tennyson is better known and has higher repute than in his life-time. He did not awake one morning to find himself famous. He compared to the compared to the first the formulation of the formulation of the first the first three compared to th aever bore "through Europe to the Etolian shore the "pageant of his bleeding heart, while thousands counted"

SIR FRED'S VAIN BOASTING.

Sir Fred Borden's statement in London that a few years ago the Canadian Militia was an unorganized mob, whereas now there is an organization which can place 50,000 soldiers in the field at once, with anoth 50,000 in a short time, is a vain boast on his own be half and an unjust reflection on his predecessors.

It is true that the minister has the headquarters staff for an army of 50,000 or 100,000 men. But he has very few more men in training than there were years ago, when the expenditure was a quarter of the present amount. So far as can be observed they are no better trained in camp or elsewhere than they were ten or twelve years ago. This year they have less training than formerly. No person but the minister can see anything to show for the enormous increase of expendi-ture. Before Sir Fred. Borden was a minister, the militia went to camp as often, and remained as long, and were as well exercised as they are now. The regi-ments were kept up to strength as well as they have been since. The rank and file got as much target practice as they get today, and it seemed to do them as much good.

Of course Sir Fred has more generals and colonels about him. He has a host of inspectors. His salary bill at Ottawa has doubled and doubled again. It is certain that if trouble arose he could place in the field five or six times as many staff officers as could have
