NOTES AND NEWS.

NOVA SCOTIA.

A man named John Noonan while selling ballads in Halifax on the Brown-Biglin scull-race, got so over-excited, that in Lower Water street he did not see a hatch open, and fell into it. He was slightly bruised about the face.

Friday morning Thomas Bunfee, a carpenter in the employ of Mr. Jas. Fraser, while working on the roof of a building on South street, Halifax, fell to the ground, breaking his collar bone and one of his arms, and otherwise severely injuring himself.

The Truro Sun is justly indignant at the disgraceful conduct of some unknown parties in that town, who broke the windows of the Roman Catholic Church there, by throwing stones at them. Vandalism like this, if left unrebuked and unpunished, will bring discredit upon the town of Truro.

In Truro the other day, at the instance of the Clerk of License there, a woman was fined for violating the license law. She paid her fine and turned the tables on the Clerk of License by proving a case of selling liquor without license against that official, and the magistrate, before whom the case was tried, imposed a heavy fine, with the costs of trial.

UNITED STATES.

Prince Esterhazy committed suicide because of an incurable spinal complaint and from grief at the absence of his sister, who had devotedly attended him. He fired a pistol bullet through his heart.

The Scandinavians of Brooklyn have been giving a reception to Mme. Nilsson. The company was made up entirely of working men and women, but the songstress thought none the less of their kindness for that.

The Earl of Aberdeen, the adventurous and aristocratic sailor who was drowned two or three years ago, is believed to be completely and thoroughly dead, and we see no reason for resuscitating his history. We notice that the story has been galvanized into life and set travelling about again. It is a pity that the dead past cannot be allowed the privilege of burying its dead.

Vicksburg, too, has its ghost, the spectre of a slaughtered chicken thief who lingers about the scene of his former depredations with a mournful interest and a decidedly bad effect on the nerves of the neighbors. A young man lately attempted to shoot the wandering sprite, but his arm was paralyzed and the "wind whirtled between his hat and his head."

It must be a dreary place to live in, that New Iberia region in Lousiana. It is a land of bayous and pelicans, but life there has its compensations. There is much to make one's existence lively and exciting. A week or two ago twelve cattle thieves were hung by a vigilance committee in one day. Few places furnish their citizens with an exhibition of this kind in addition to alligators, and racking agues.

Some of the officials of the city of Boston have been in bad odor lately. In fact, a "very ancient and fish-like smell" pervaded the corridors of the City Hall, and it took a smelling committee a long time to hunt up a tom-cod in the pockets of an old coat hanging in a closet. It was put there for a joke, while some of the officials were on a fishing excursion. If this is the only rotten thing in that City Hall happy are the people of Boston.

The ingenuity implied by wooden nutmegs in Connecticut has been surpassed by a Maine farmer, who had just been detected in a decidedly greasy swindle. It appears that this fellow, borrowing an idea from the fillers of gold coins, has taken lumps of tallow, covered them with a coating of yellow butter, and then taking the filled balls to market sold them to the traders. Last week his little trick was found out, and he was punished as he deserved.

"A gentleman in religious character and of fine moral distinctions" advertises in Chicago for a boarding place with a "party of ladies or of ladies and gentlemen," where his "pious depontment and exemplary conduct will be appreciated and could be made available as an equivalent for board." No doubt these excellent qualities ought to be a sufficient consideration for any board to be found in Chicago, but unhappily "religious character" and "fine moral distinctions" are least appreciated where they are most needed.

An interesting case turned up lately in a San Francisco court. "Prof." Tilton, who said he was "in the hair-growing business," brought suit against Mr. Taylor to recover $100 which the latter had agreed to pay in case the plaintiff's "rejuvenator" caused his hair to grow. Experts in hair and in lack of hair were examined, and Taylor and his head were examined, and the result was that the case was dismissed. The Professor declared that he had got a beautiful crop under way on Mr. Taylor's cranium, but curiously enough the latter, though no expert on the subject, was supposed to know best.

New Hampshire has endeavored of late to keep even with her sister States in the matter of atrocious murders. The latest achievement in that line is that of Mr. Pattee, of New Hampton. Mr. Pattee lost his wife last fall and naturally enough, perhaps, wanted another. He cast his eye upon a neighboring widow who had considerable property and said in his heart that he would have the property and take the chances of the widow. He was accounted a bad man, and the widow would have none of him until he became converted and was an ardent Methodist. Then she fell into his wiles. He married her and the property, but has proceeded to get rid of the encumbrance by killing his wife and hanging her up in a closet in order to throw upon her the suspicion of suicide. It is not a great city but the simplest of country towns that has produced this monster.

GENERAL.

Miss Olive Logan says that half the labor she put into the book which has been so severely criticised, would bring her a fortune in the milinery business. This seems to us to show, if it shows anything, that Olive has mistaken her calling.

An Eastern traveller says that a Jew has appeared in Arabia who claims to be the Messiah. He is credited with many wonderful miracles, and followed devotedly by crowds of superstitious Bedouins. This shows that the days of miracles are not past, at least the days when people are ready to believe in miracles.

A traveller, on his arrival in the city, stopped for a moment to examine a coat hanging in front of a clothing store, when the proprietor rushed out and asked, "Wouldn't you try on some coats?" "I dunno but I would," responded the traveller, consulting his time-killer; and he went in and began to work. No matter how often he found his fit he called for more coats, and after he had tried on thirty he looked at his watch, again resumed his own garment, and walked off, saying: "I won't charge a cent for what I've done. Hang a man who won't oblige another when he can do it! If I'm ever around this way again, and you've got any more coats to try on, I'll do all I can to help you!"

Said a Newgate turnkey to a Quaker lady: "I was showing our place the other day to a remarkably intelligent American who admired our arrangements exceedingly, only he thought we were too lenient. That gentleman said that the great mistake in America was leniency. 'Would you believe it,' said he, 'we caught a rascal in America the other day whom we ought immediately to have burned, and we only hung him. But we are coming to our senses, and are now making arrangements to burn certain men for whom the gallows is too good.' 'Will thee be good enough to tell me the name of the American gentleman who made that remark to thee?' said the Quakeress. 'Ah, yes,' said the warder reflectively; 'let me see—it was a Mr. Mark Twain.'"

The bustle and stir that has been occasioned in England by the warlike expedition to the Gold Coast of Africa again brings the Ashantee war into bold relief. The origin of the trouble which the barbarians have long been trying to settle is found in the desire of the Ashantees to extend their domain. The Ashantees desire to gain access to the seacoast, which is held by England, so that they can carry on their commerce without the intervention of the rapacious Fantees, who inhabit the British territory. The latter, being allies of England, are now to be assisted by a British army in driving back the Ashantees, who are to be taught to keep the peace by being shot down with English beech-loaders and having their villages burned over their heads. The success of the expedition means the strengthening of British power, and the order has gone forth from the British Government that the Ashantee Capital must be destroyed and the King dethroned. The difficulties are far greater than they were in Abyssinia. The road to the capital lies through miles of dense forest, teeming with malaria, filled with venomous reptiles and especially adapted to ambuscades on the part of an enemy whose numbers are overwhelming and with whom recklessness of life is a most prominent peculiarity. The English people, John Bright among others, are asking themselves what is to be gained by this waste of life and money; but as the expedition has already started out, coming events will probably answer the question.

The bungling execution of a criminal at Liverpool recently, affords fresh evidence that the veteran English executioner, Calcraft, is getting old, and there is reason to believe that the Government will soon remove him from the proud position he has so long occupied. The prisoner in this case was one James Connor, who was sentenced to death for the brutal murder of a fellow laborer. Connor bore himself with singular firmness, and nodded and smiled to two of the wardens even carelessly. But when the drop fell, the man was seen still standing on the platform with an apparently broken rope dangling over his head. Some of the officials immediately attended upon the unfortunate man, but a pair of steps had to be procured before he could be got out of his position and placed on to the upper part of the scaffold. The poor man uttered exclamations of pain, and on being got to the upper platform of the scaffold the white cap was drawn above his eyes and he was placed on a chair. Calcraft was much distressed at the accident, and as he moved about the scaffold holding the broken rope and examining it, he trembled and was apparently greatly agitated. When again taken hold of, Connor said, "What do you call this? Is this murder?" And when the priest exhorted him to keep up he said in piteous accents, "I stood it like a brick the first time; I think I should get off now." It was eight minutes before the second drop could be got ready, and the poor wretch was finally strangled.
