Roller rock raises rubles

A CJSR-sponsored roller rock concert Friday night raised over $2,100 for the Students' Union refugee family.

Live Roller Rock drew in over 650 paying customers who boogied the night away — and paid $5.00 each to roller skate to P.J. Burton and the Smarties and Silent Movies.

"They ran out of skates," said CJSR organizer Doug Matthews. "It was a resounding success."

Matthews said sponsors expected only about 300 people to attend, but last-minute ticket sales pushed attendance over the top.

The event, which started at 12:30 a.m., lasted till past 4:00 a.m. "This proves that Edmonton really does have a night life," Matthews said.

"It was such a success that instead of expanding the radio station, we're going to cover the courtyard and install a rollerskating surface," he joked.

Matthews said the radio station was able to donate almost all gate revenues to the refugee family because of volunteer help from over 30 members of the radio station and the refugee committee.

Ticket outlets sold the tickets without charge and the bands did not charge for their services.

"Our only overhead was renting the PA system and printing the posters and tickets," he said.

Communist, from page 3

that Soviet society is not a utopia, he said eventually those attitudes will change.

Kashtan urged students "to dig in and get the facts" about current world issues before making judgements.

And is Marxism the final answer to society's problems?

"It can be," said Kashtan, "if it continues to be on top of new developments and deals with them in a scientific manner." "It's currently a valid and growing science."
