Nestle boycott violated

WINNIPEG (CUP) — The Student Association at the University of Winnipeg has been found to violate a boycott it supports.

The student association voted March 24 to join the long list of groups participating in a boycott of Nestle Ltd. products because of that company's third-world marketing policies which have allegedly resulted in the deaths of nearly one million infants per year.

Later that day, the student newspaper at the University of Winnipeg, the Uniter, reported that vending machines at the university, from which student association receives one-third of the profit, stocks Nestle products.

Upon learning of this conflict of interest, the student association voted to ask the university's food services committee to investigate alternatives to Nestle products.

The university receives two-thirds of the profit from the machines.

University administration officials were unavailable for com-

The vending machines at the University of Winnipeg are operated by Hudson's Bay Wholesaling. Company spokesperson Henry Vandam said he was unaware of the boycott against Nestle Ltd.

The world-wide boycott has been endorsed by the World Health Organization, OXFAM, and a number of other public interest groups.

Sheaf loses autonomy bid

SASKATOON (CUP) - The University of Saskatchewan's student newspaper has lost a bid for financial separation from its students' union.

In a March 5 and 6 referendum, 54.1 percent of voters rejected a proposal that would have seen a $2.88 per student levy go directly to the Sheaf Publishing Society. Presently the newspaper negotiates public funding from the student council.

"It was a reasonable proposal," said Sheaf editor Bob Kozak. "It's just that some people didn't understand what we were asking for.

Obviously there are some 1,500 people on campus who feel the Sheaf isn't their own paper," said Peter Hammond, western fieldworker for Canadian University Press.

Hammond said the main reason for guaranteed financing is prevent student council control over the content of the paper." He said the long term guarantees for freedom are important.

Don Rutherford, president-elect of the U of S student union, said the referendum outcome was disappointing, but was pleased at the number of people voting in favor. Only 2,736 out of a possible 9,600 voters cast ballots.

III SII B The state of the s FOR AIR TRAVELERS LEAD LA

Most airports use X-ray equipment to examine handbags, luggage, etc. in their security loading checks. Canada is a world leader in recognizing that this X-ray examination can adversely affect any photographic film you are carrying with you, and in many airports advises travellers of this danger. However, other countries may be lax in this regard and consequently your vacation film could be ruined quite easily. Kodak ships all its film with a warning on its shipping cartons advising air handlers not to place the carton near radioactive materials or to X-ray inspect them.

We advise storing your film in "FILMSHIELD"

Filmshield is a lead laminated pouch which protects film against airport X-ray damage. Its 3 layers consist of a tough polyester outer skin, a lead inner shield and finally a barium impregnated polyethylene layer inside the pouch.
