

AP Canada Wide photo

is m gyptian President Anwar Sadat is ernen belcomed by Algeria's President Houari or al oumedienne at Algiers airport as the g ers gyptian leader arrives to attend the ents act countries over Berlin could have sent nity verybody to a premature rendezvous with alific ternity. It was precisely these fears and the sense of powerlessness in face of such ensions that brought the movement into eing. East-West détente has thus rehe discase the mortar that held the difice of nonalignment together. This is time iot to say, of course, that, even if it does least of find a precise role, nonalignment will tem of have a chance of survival.

auded by Peking

h am

ace ( ized

is i

ıt, W eine ados n the conventional demonology of nonlignment, the two arch-villains are the uperpowers - the Soviet Union and the nited States. Naturally enough, this has but neant that the grouping has been much Aric raised by Peking and the occasions of its the onferences, whether ministerial or sumhit-level, are nowadays invariably the lly ignal for a chorus of praise from the hinese media. This does not please Mosof thow, with the result that what one may en sall the "ideology of nonalignment" has ie W fourth summit of nonaligned nations September 1973. More than 70 countries were represented at the sessions in Algiers of Third World leaders.

become the subject of furious debate between Moscow and Peking. On the whole, Peking has had the better of the argument so far as propaganda is concerned, simply because the idea of the two superpowers as the two villains is so firmly established. Whether it is believed or not, it is a handy idea by which the members of the grouping can define what they have in common. This is just one of the reasons why it is likely that Peking's influence in the Third World will increase at the expense of Moscow's during the next few years. The Soviet Union's reputation at the Algiers meeting would probably have been even more heavily assailed were it not for its vital military support to the Arabs and the fact that the meeting was taking place in an Arab capital.

Even so, this question produced one of the major incidents of the conference. The vast majority of speakers had cast the two superpowers in joint villain roles. This brought a spirited defence of Moscow from Prime Minister Fidel Castro of Cuba.