

THE SUMMER'S EVENING.

TWAS on a summer's evening
 fair,
 I rambl'd forth to take the air;
 All nature smil'd supremely gay,
 Dreft in her richest best array;
 Along the meads the lambs did play,
 And birds were singing on each spray:
 Thus as I stray'd the mead along,
 Attentive to their tuneful song,
 Two female linnets I esp'y'd,
 [The one a maid, the one a bride,
 Close side by side together sat,
 And seem'd engag'd in serious chat:

With silent steps I then drew near,
And plainly did their converse hear;
The married bride had her harangue
Just finish'd—Thus the maid began
' You praise so much the marry'd life,
' And seem to pleas'd you are a wife,
' You'd almost make me think there is
' In marriage state some real bliss;
' But that from what I've seen in life,
' When once the pair are man and
' wife,
' Love oft gives way to noise and strife;
' Then pray to me this problem prove,
' Why wedlock's oft the end of love?
