Mr. Baltours's scheme for the partial relief of Ireland from the present excessive traxision to which the country is subjected includes a concession to the demands of the Home Rulers, as the amount to be apportioned out of the Partic Coasts and in New Registand has been very great, and a high rank has be January, 1898, "both landlords and tenants will be benefited, and a system of local government will be established which he believes will work safely and smoothly." The concession will, undoubtely, be acceptable to the people of Ireland, but it is not to be expected that it will be taken as an equivalent for the Home Rule which Ireland justly demands.

CATHOLIC PRESS.

A striking illustration of the haziness about such an important question as that of holy orders which prevails among our separated brethern is fur nished by the recent discussion of the Ballington Booth case during the General Council of the Reformed Episcopa Church. Bishop Fallows admitted that his action in ordaining Mr. Booth had been "somewhat extra canonical," but was of opinion that the cleavage in the Booth family was "providential." Com-mander Booth had received "some kind of ordination from his father," and now wanted something which would entitle him to recognition among the churches in America. The complacent bishop, therefore, though unwilling to ordain him as an orthodox minister of his own communion, compromised by ordaining him "in the general Church of Christ"whatever that may mean. This jugg ling of words would be merely amusing were it not suggestive of an utter lack of appreciation of the real meaning of ordination. "Bishop" Fallows, and others like him, have evidently come to look upon it as a mere matter of form. -N. Y. Freeman's Journal.

Most controversies between Catholics and sectarian writers remind us of men engaged in angry contention across backyard fence: they argue from different premises. We can do nothing for the conversion of Protestants until they have been made to understand the true meaning of a church. A clever writer was recently asked how he could continue his allegiance to the Church of England; and his reply, which expresses a condition of mind not uncommon in these days, is worth consid-

It is just because in ber communi-It is just because in her communion everyone believes and disbelieves what he likes "that I am able to do so. We live in an age of transition, when the old moorings are dragged, and when we do not know what the future will bring forth. They therefore, who have felt the influence of the Zeitgeist are at home in a communion which has no definite voice, which leaves us largely to think what we will: we feel it well to be members of an uncertain church.

The Catholic Church has always spoken with an unfaltering and unwavering voice, and an unfaltering and unwavering voice, and therefore I can not join her. The Nonconformist churches were all founded to testify to some definite dogma. But the Church of England was founded to be a compromise, to include warring opinions: and was therefore purposely left to speak with the voice of hesitation, and not of certainty. It is for this reason that I am loyal to her.

We have heard many threasons, for

We have heard many "reasons" for the faith of Protestants; but this one has the merit of originality. Argument about specific doctrines with a man like this would be about as reasonable, to use Newman's expression, as a battle between a dog and a fish. -Ave Maria.

The Sisters of Notre Dame are about to open a Woman's College in Wash. ington, D. C., adjacent to the Catholic University of America. The despatches in the daily press last week, on this matter, though inaccurate as to detail, and unauthorized by the people most interested, were correct as to the The Sisters have not, at the time of writing received the deed of the splendid property, which they have purchased at the university gates. Directly they have received it, thev will themselves make a full statement of the scope and aims of their College.

The twenty-seventh annual distribution of prizes was witnessed by a large audience, His Lordship Bishop O'Connor distributed the scholarships and prizes and at the close made a short address to the parents and pupils in the course of which he paid a tribute to the teachers for their devotion to the work and to the pupils for their willing co-operation, without which much of the good that had been done would of necessity have been left unaccomplished.

Among the clergy present were: Revs. McManus, Van Antwerp, Wicart, Kessler, Brancheau, J. Ryan, Ternes, Regan, Grand, J. Bayard, Rochleau, P. Ryan, McGee, L. Heureux and Richard O'Brien.

Commencement day is always a memorable one to the college student. It is frequently the first great mile-stone on the journey of life. As he burns the midnight oil in his quest of knowledge, the thoughts of graduating and entering the broad highway called the world incite him to greater efforts. But when the day comes at last and he stands the successful graduate, he finds him self saddened by thoughts of breaking the ties that bind him so closely to the kind, watchful and thoughtful preceptors; to the college halls and his fellow-students. But the separation comes and he goes forth to rear a superstructure on the foundation that has been laid in his Alma Mater, and thereafter it rests almost wholly with himself whether the structure we call character shall be worthy of his teachers and himself.

The Jubilee in Goderich

In the town of Goderich, as elsewhere, the celebration of the Queen's jubilee was carried out with much enthusiasm. The Sons of Scotland lighted an immense bonfire, and speeches by prominent citizens was the chief feature of the occasion. Amongst others Judge Doyle made a very appropriate address. He said Victoria had been a most exemplary Queen, a model wife and mother, and a most heble woman, whose good example has not only been beneficial to the whole empire over which she ruled, but has had also a beneficial to the whole empire over which more civil and religious liberty in her's than in any previous reign. Feople of all nationalities and all religious throughout the Dominion are united in this glorious celebration. Judge Masson had referred to the loyalty of the Scotchman; but said the speaker, I claim that the Irishman in Canada is equally as loyal here, because of the Jastice of our laws; but agree with the foremost Scotchman and the greatest British statesman in the world to day. Mr. Gladstone, that the Irishman in Ireland is not properly ruled. Give Ireland Home Rule, such as we have in Canada, and there will be no more loyal subjects than the Irish in the whole Empire.
