The sandence at the London Institution to a wonderful collection of lantern slides, illustrative of the elephant's evolution from the ancient mammoths and mastedons. Some of the skeletons reproduced on the screen had been uncerthed in Great Britain.

Prof. Ray Lankester was particularly interesting on the subject of the elephant's trunk. A picture of a longiawed mastedons skeleton from central France was shown, and a soft, long upper lip resting on the long lower jaw was pointed out as corresponding to the trunk of the modern elephant.

"The elephant's trunk," said the lecturer, "originated through a shortening of the lower jaw. Therefore, I am sorry to upset Mr. Rudyard Kipling's explanation that the length of the trunk was accounted for by its having been pulled by the crocodile."

A picture of a tapir, with its long proboscis resting on and drooping over the end of its lower jaw, was shown as an example of what was probably one stage of the elephant's trunk, and, remarking upon this, the professor said: "The tendency in modern times has been the general bull-dogging' of the elephant's head. Thus its lower jaw has receded, and its upper lip has grown and drooped into he familiar trunk."

negie was charming and winsome, while Miss Warren as "Annie" takes her part with equal grace and ease. Miss Cairo as Margaret and Kenneth McKenzie as Tammas were typical "auld kentry folk." Mr. Maurice Lavigne as Rev. John Carmichael takes the part of the spiritual adviser of the glen folk with proper dignity. Mr. Leonard Howe as Lord Hay, the hero, gave a very finished portrayal of his role. The two Bannett children are very clever in their parts.

One other feature which must not be overlooked is the singing of the male quartette, which, to judge by the applause, met with a great deal of popular fayor.

The piece is well staged, and the scenery is as realistic as the acting. Altogether, the Bonnie Brier Bush, as put on by the company at the Brisco, is one which no Chathamite should miss seeing.

would be of the utmost value have re-fused to attend and give evidence be-cause of the iron-bound privacy of the proceedings. The class of evidence which will be discussed at this pri-vate conference is intensely interest-ing to the British public. It is repre-sented by this typical statement from the pen of Dr. Brachet, professor of physiology at the Ecole de Medicine, Paris:

"I inspired a dog with the greatest

Paris:

"I inspired a dog with the greatest aversion for me," he says, "by plaguing or inflicting some pain or other upon it as often as I saw it. When this feeling was carried to its height, so that the animal became furious as soon as it saw or heard me, I put out its eyes. I could then appear before it without its manifesting any aversion. I spoke, and immediately its barkings and furious movements proved the passion which animated it.

How to Make Friends.

"I therefore destroyed the drum of its ears and disorganized the internal ear as much as I could, and when an intense inflammation which was excited had rendered it deaf I filled up its ears with molten wax. It could no longer hear at all. Then I went to its side, spoke aloud, and even caressed it, without its falling into a rage; it seemed even sensible of my caresses."

Dr. Brachet repeated the same experiment on another dog, and states that the result was always the same.

An incident which sickened the heart even of a prominent vivisectionist is told by Dr. Latour, who was present at the time a dog was being mutilated by Dr. Majendie in order to demonstrate a certain theory.

"The dog, mutilated and bleeding, says Dr. Latour, "twice escaped from under the implacable knife, and threw its front paws around Majendie's neck, licking, as if to soften its murderer and ask for mercy. I confess, says Dr. Latour, "I was unable to bear that heart-rending spectacle."

Candor and Cruelty.

Candor and Cruelty.

A writer in the Revue Nationale himself relates how he laid several large dogs on a table and beat them with a heavy wooden mallet, striking the animals thirty-two times on one side, and again thirty-two times on the other, after which he dislocated both shoulders and fastened the limbs behind the animals' backs. He adds that he did this without anesthetics, so that he might know how much pain was inflicted from the creature's cries, and also because, he adds, we know the generous nature he adds, we know the generous nature of the dog, who will at night lick the hand that in the morning had been employed in striking him with a heavy wooden mallet.

Dr. Allix, a well-known French veterinary surgeon, adds a grim touch to this catalogue of horrors.

"I have known," he says, "dogs die of sheer terror in anticipation of their doom before the vivisector had time to commence his operations."

These are the kind of facts which the Royal Commission is now discussing behind closed doors.
