Atonement

By JESSIE ETHEL SHERWIN

"Throw him out!" Tar and feather

"Let us at him!" "That's enough, lads—the man who touches Warren Marsh goes down with the heaviest my fist can give." Thus in three bawling sentences a crowding passion-faced 7 coterie of rough working men spoke. They were met by the rugged dissent of Big Jim Evans, foreman of the Midyllis Steel mills. He was a very giant in build, twice the size of the ordinary man, and as he stood in front of the one he defended the sight of his knotted hand defended the sight of his knotted hand held the others at bay.

The man he champloned was pale, palpably perturbed, but not with fear, he said: "Thank you," to mammoth Jim. He faced the odd-fifty men and remarked quietly: "Mates, I've come back to tell you a story."

"And you shall have your hearing, as is the right of every man," pronounced blg Jim. The scene was a large half where the poorer classes of Midville held parties dances and deba'es. There, to the unbounded astonishment of its denizens, Warren Marsh had suddenly appeared. Jim helped him to mount chair and sang out stentoriously:

"Attention!"

"I've called you, mates," began Warren Marsh, "because I wish to come among you as a fellow workman. Most of you have known me since I was a of you have known me since I was a boy. Many of you knew my father when he started the mill here 30 years ago. He was a working man like yourselves, made his way with the plant, and became your boss. I served an apprenticeship at hard work and he left the business to me. I ran it until str moaths ago, when the crash came. You swore by me in the good days, den't curse me now, in the bad ones.

"You all know what has happened.
I never had my fling," as you call it, and when I got into company of shrewd, scheming scoundress whom I took for friends, it was with eyes blinded to the mauners and selfishness of the world. Let us make the story short. I was led to drink, to gambling The group into whose clutches I fell wound about me coils that made me belpless. At the end of two months, helpless. At the end of two mouths, my true friends fergotten, my business neglected, I was abandoned by the sharpers who had fleeced me of all I possessed. My neglect of business I possessed. My neglect of business caused my creditors, the present oper-ators of the mills, to close me out. You people found yourselves out of work for a month, and your old wages reyou. I have come back poor as the poorest of you, but the new management has hired me as superincendent at $2,500 a year. I can live on $500. Mates, the $2,000 will be distributed among you as it comes in until you have received the pay you lost when the crash came. It may take me ten years to repay you all, but it shall be done to the last nearly with interest." ment has hired me as to repay you an, but it shall be done to the last penny, with interest."

That was how Warren Marsh came back to his native town. Thencefor-ward he became the idol of the men, as he had been before his mad "filing" ward he been before his mad "filing" had transpired. He was mate, friend, helper. He took up modest quarters in the village, and at the end of each month apportioned pro rata four fifths of his salary. His influence and energy so advanced the business that its management doubled his income at the end of six months.

Cheerful, optimistic, genial in public, when he was alone a strange sadness came over his fame. There was a care in his mind he had hidden from all. His "bad break" had cost him more than fortune, business, and position. It had cost him adele Farlow. Just before March had fallen by the wayside she had left for a two years' wayside she had left for a two years' health trip in behalf of her brother health trip in behalf of her brother, Ardmore. Marsh had known both for about a year, had learned to love the sister and had all but told her so. He and Ardmore had been close friends, and a month after his departure Ardmore had written him that he had settled in California, had an opportunity to buy a piece of property that socked like a paying speculation, and Marsh had advanced part of the investment capital. With his downfall Marsh felt he had forfeited all right to renew the old friendship with Adele.

he had forfeited all right to renew the old friendship with Adele.

He worked day and night. He became guide and leader of the men of the mills. He was friend and nurse to the unfortunates and invalids. He had not answered the last letter Ardmore Farlow had written him, sorrowfully regarding that friendship as a desail chapter.

Then upon his birthday a letter came that thrilled him. It was from young ardmore, and it told of the land investment turning out so grandly that his share meant more than he had lost to the haplasse.

"It was not until a few days since that Adele and I-learned all the story of your trials and triumph," the letter

I Regained My Health

And Dr. Chase's Nerve Food Will Do as Much for You Under Similar Conditions.

Because we all have nervous systems which get out of order at one time or another it is of vital importance that we know the best means of restoration.

When we get tired and languid, suffer from headaches and irritability, find difficulty in obtaining rest and sleep and begin to feel downsearted and discouraged, it is because the nerves are not obtaining proper nourishment.

Medical treatment must necessarily fall unless it supplies nutrition to Medical treatment must necessarily fail unless it supplies nutrition to the starred and depleted nerves. This is exactly why Dr. Chase's Nerve Food has proven so wonderfully successful. Through the medium of the blood it feeds the exhausted nerves back to health and vigor.

medium of the blood it feeds the exhausted nerves back to health and vigor.

This letter explains how it succeeds in the most stubborn cases.

Mrs. S. Meathrel, 23 Hyla street, London, Ont., writes: "About a year ago I had a complete collapse from my nerves. I was taken to the hospital for a treatment, but it did not give me much relief. When I was brought home again, I went to the country for a change of air. I seemed to be a little better while there, but after my return home I did not feel much better. I used to have nerve a spells when my limbs would begin to shake, then grow cold, and I would be completely exhausted. I was also troubled with an accumulation of gas on my stomach, which caused palpitation of the heart. At least I decided to try Dr. Chase's Nerre Food, and after I had used them for a while, I could see that they were helping me, so I continued using them until I became quite well again. I became real strong and healthy, could sleep well at might, and was able to do my own housework. As I got stronger, the nervous spells disappeared, and I have not had one since."

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cents a box, a full treatment of 6 boxes for $2.75, at all dealers. or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto. Do' not be talked into accepting a substitute. Imitations only disappoint.
